WFA Drafts Fluid Milk Consumption Control Plan

Hopes to Keep Sales At Recent Levels; Point Rationing Not Contemplated

To Prevent Increases

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

Plans for controlling fluid milk sales at recent levels will be announced by the War Food Administration within the next few days.

WFA officials yesterday emphasized no point rationing program is involved. Civilian milk consumption will not be curtailed but only brought under control to prevent increases, they said.

The control probably will be exerted by limiting sales both to grocers and home delivery customers to ward off increased deliveries. The milk distribution systems of most cities are so well organized this would be comparatively simple.

Rapid Increase

Consumption of fluid milk, the only major dairy product not under distribution control, has increased so rapidly during the summer months that civilian supplies of butter, cheese and evaporated milk are threatened, WFA said.

"Total milk output has increased almost 10 billion pounds since 1940, but is now at about the highest level which can be expected under present conditions. Although milk production has leveled off and may decline somewhat more than seasonally, consumption of fluid milk is continuing to increase steadily—at the rate of about 1 per cent a month.

Intense Competition

"This is resulting in the encroachment on milk supplies which ordinarily go into the manufacture of war-important dairy products. It also has resulted in an intense competition for supplies and consequent disruption in normal marketing practices," it was declared.

By leveling off consumption, butter production this year "may be maintained at about the same level as last year," WFA said, but the output of American cheese, evaporated milk and dried skim milk has already declined and "may be 20 per cent smaller than in 1942."

Milk production in the United States reached an all-time high of 119 billion pounds last year. It may fall a billion pounds below that for 1943, which still will be well above the usual peacetime supply.

But Only Hull Comments

Roosevelt and Churchill Keep Close Tab on Invasion

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill yesterday observed without comment the progress of the Allied invasion of the Italian boot in a day of closed conferences and almost hourly advices on second front developments.

Only Secretary of State Cordell Hull broke Washington's official silence on the British Eighth Army's powerful thrust. Hull said he could think of no better way to celebrate the fourth anniversary of Britain's entry into the war.

"We all are observing the occupation of a portion of continental Europe," the Secretary told newsmen. "This is the first step in such continental occupation by the Allied armies and I think it well illustrates the steady and the persistent course of the Allied military forces in their movement on continental Europe."

President Roosevelt again cancelled all but the most urgent appointments to spend more time with his distinguished guest. Familiar with the Allied invasion timetable, they sat up until 1 a. m. yesterday, then retired before the first dispatches came through.

Yesterday they kept in constant touch with Eighth Army blows through the War Department. The President received only one official guest, Henrik de Kauffmann, the Danish Minister to Washington, who said he called to discuss "the last event" in Denmark with the President. His call underscored the importance given here to the Danish revolt. Only Thursday, Secretary Hull had highly praised Danish resistance in a letter to de Kauffmann.

In between talks with the President, Prime Minister Churchill put in an active day. Churchill's calling list included Brendan Bracken, British Minister of Information; Bernard Baruch, OWM adviser, and an old friend of the Prime Minister; Lieut. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, chief of the Army Service Forces, and Ad-

'Grand Scale'

By James M. Long
Associated Press Staff Writer

London (Saturday), Sept. 4.—A conquering Red army overran more than 400 villages yesterday in smashing 12-mile gains that threatened early seizure of the Donets steel center of Stalino and the northern Ukraine citadel of Konotop, Moscow disclosed officially early today.

A 4-mile lunge on the central front also carried the Russians over the bodies of 4200 enemy troops to a point within 40 miles of the major base of Smolensk whence the Germans tried to take Moscow in 1941.

The Germans apparently were in headlong retreat in the Donets Basin, but also were being hurled back at other major points along the 600-mile front, Moscow said in a communique recorded by the Soviet monitor here.

Only 20 Miles Away

One Russian unit was only 20 miles east of Stalino, after capturing Zuevka, and other Soviet forces had spilled across the network of railways radiating from that hub.

The Germans captured Stalino October 21, 1941, then triumphantly terming it the "Essen of Russia," and comparing its importance with the once great, but now battered, Krupp armament works in the Ruhr valley.

In the Ukraine the Russians reached a point only 14 miles north of Konotop.

The Germans, perhaps preparing the homeland for news of the fall of Stalino, long Hitler's headquarters for southern front operations, made the unusual announcement last night that the Soviet army had launched a "grand scale" offensive in that area.

A German radio commentator, Gen. Kurt Dittmar, also declared that military developments in Russia were "repeatedly critical," because of the necessity of dividing

Air Power Speaks

Brenner Pass Railroad Blasted, Naples Lines Laid in Ruins

By Noland Norgaard
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Sept. 3.—Allied air power broke the vital German reinforcement railroad from the Brenner Pass and blocked rail routes near Naples in crippling preinvasion blows today. At the same time, thunderous waves of Allied planes supporting their ground forces smashed at the enemy on the toe of Italy in continuing assaults.

The Brenner Pass is the funnel for Nazi troops rushing into Italy. United States Flying Fortresses cut the rail line below it yesterday, wrecking the tracks and bridges at Bolzano and Trento, 35 and 65 miles south of the strategic gateway, at least temporarily halting traffic.

It was their deepest strike—1500 miles roundtrip—into Italy, and other formations blasted the freight yards at Bologna on the same rail route 170 miles below the pass.

Mitchell medium bombers shattered freight yards at Cancello, northeast of Naples, and headquarters declared that afterward photographs showed that "all lines to Naples, Salerno, Torre Annunziata, Capua and Benevento had been blocked." Twenty-three Axis planes were shot down at Cancello in a fierce air battle and ten P-38 Lightnings were lost.

Allied air formations were thrown across Messina Strait continuously today to bomb and machine gun Axis positions ahead of invading Allied troops, and blast the enemy in the hills farther north.

They gave constant protection to landing forces, meeting no enemy planes, and one pilot said, "in the strait we saw hundreds of craft darting to and fro unmolested." Another airman described it as "like the changing of the guard at Buckingham Palace" as new patrols arrived every 50 minutes to provide cover.

Aerial reconnaissance after the Fortress raids on Bolzano, Trento and Bologna showed that "this main artery of German reinforce-

2 Italian Ports Have Fallen Already, Berlin Radio Says; Big Guns Blast Path as Barges Stream Across Strait

By Edward Kennedy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Sept. 3.—British and Canadian troops landed successfully on the toe of Italy before dawn today on the long road to Rome and plunged inland under Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's order to "knock Italy out of the war."

(Scilla and Reggio Calabria, Italian ports 12 miles apart, already have fallen, the Berlin radio indicated. A Rome broadcast in phrases reminiscent of the Axis debacle in Sicily also said: "The enemy's invasion now is in full swing. The enemy has set foot on the Italian mainland and is taking full advantage of his material superiority.")

(The London Daily Express said early Saturday: "From the Italian battlefront early today came news that the Eighth Army had enlarged its bridgeheads to a depth of 10 miles at some places.

("The advance was continuing in a northerly direction toward the first substantial Axis defenses near Palmi, more than 20 miles by road from the landing beaches at Reggio Calabria.")

This was the first of several expected invasions of the Hitler-held European continent. The American Seventh Army of Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., was not yet in action. Other powerful American and French forces were poised in North Africa.

Hours after the assault at 4:30 a. m. across the narrow Messina Strait from Sicily, there was no official word of the progress of the strong Allied forces involved. None was likely until tomorrow.

Pilot Encountered No Axis Planes

But returning airmen who witnessed the early hours of the invasion indicated its continuing success.

One RAF Spitfire pilot said he had maintained constant patrol over the landing area without encountering any Axis planes, and added: "In the strait we saw hundreds of craft darting to and fro unmolested."

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Allied commander in chief, directed the assault with assets never before available to him. His air strength was prodigious; the Royal Navy and American naval forces dominated the Messina Strait and other southern coastal areas of Italy; he had hundreds of thousands of seasoned warriors.

With excellent coordination, Flying Fortresses made their deepest strike into northern Italy to wreck the Brenner Pass railroad feeding German troops into Italy; US Mitchell bombers also tore up the rail network radiating from Cancello above Naples in order to seal off southern Italy and make it ripe for land conquest.

The United Nations radio appealed to the people of Italy to receive "the Allied forces of liberation" in the same manner their ancestors had received those of Garibaldi, and the broadcast concluded: "Out with the Germans." It made no mention of Marshal Pietro Badoglio's government that took over after the Sicilian invasion saw Benito Mussolini's exit from power.

Allies Expect Bitter Resistance

"Allied forces are prepared to face the most bitter resistance, since it can be foreseen that German resistance will increase in violence as Allied forces advance within the so-called fortress of Europe," this broadcast said.

A German broadcast recorded by the Associated Press told of fierce Axis resistance in the rugged mountains between Reggio Calabria and Scilla but indicated the fall of those two points when it said British tank forces had pushed eastward from Reggio Calabria and also had penetrated up the coast as far as Scilla.

(It declared the Allied landing was "on a large scale" and that "considerable losses had been inflicted on the invaders.")

Hundreds of small invasion barges crossed the moonless 2-mile-wide Messina Strait at 4:30 a. m. (10:30 p. m. Thursday, EWT.)

Land guns mounted in Sicily arched a canopy of shells overhead, the Royal Navy stood offshore to obliterate Axis beach resistance, and hundreds of American and Allied planes bombed and machine-gunned Axis shore defenders to pave the way for the first shock troops.

It was a terrific barrage that first hit the beaches and crawled up into the mountains, wiping out enemy pillboxes, dugouts, barbed wire entanglements and large gun mounts studding the uplands.

Troops Hit Beach and Fan Out

The dim outline of the peninsular mountains could be seen from the Sicilian shore as the troops, hunched under the weight of their armaments, shoved off for the short channel crossing.

The first waves of British and Canadians struck the beaches, fanned out and established a bridgehead for other oncoming barges that spilled their loads of men and equipment on the shores below the foothills of Aspromonte—bitter mountain—a range that is the spinal column of the toe of Italy.

By that time the Allied land and sea barrage had lifted to gnaw at Axis defenses in the crags above, and dawn found the protecting mantle of Allied planes overhead.

"Allied forces under the command of General Eisenhower have continued their advance," said the brief bulletin issued two hours after the landing.

Spokesmen here emphasized that the new assault was not to be regarded as "a second front," but merely a sequel to the North African and Sicilian campaigns. That was the meaning of the communique phrase saying Allied troops had "continued their advance."

The rugged terrain ahead of the invaders, ideal for Axis defenders, also was stressed. There was no official word of Axis opposition, but the Germans were believed to be resisting to the hilt. The Italian military factor still was a question mark.

Two German divisions escaped from Sicily to southern Italy, and other large Nazi forces are known to be in the area to fight a long bitter delaying action to keep the Allies away from the German border.

From Reggio Calabria it is more than 300 land miles to Rome and

WLB Seeking To Raise Plane Factory Pay

Move Is Considered To Increase Output Of Flying Fortresses

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

The War Labor Board is seeking a dignified retreat from its "tough" aircraft wage decision of last March, in order to permit the granting of substantial wage increases to Seattle, Wash., employes of Boeing Aircraft Co. to stimulate production of Flying Fortresses, it was reported authoritatively yesterday.

Pleas to approve more liberal wage schedules at the Boeing Washington plants were advanced by War Production Board Chairman Donald M. Nelson, WPB Vice Chairman Charles E. Wilson and representatives of the company and union labor at a closed meeting of the board early this week, it was learned.

The company and union and production officials indorsed a proposed reclassification plan which would provide varying increases for virtually all Boeing employes and would pave the way to the adoption of a wage incentive plan which would pay higher wages for more production.

Proposed Scales

The proposed reclassification would boost beginning rates from a minimum of 67 cents an hour to 82½ cents an hour, and raise highly skilled rates from about $1.30 an hour to $1.67 cents an hour. It is understood that the board is considering a compromise version of the plan which would provide a 75-cent-an-hour starting rate and a $1.50 highly skilled rate.

Last March, WLB refused to grant a general wage increase to eight Southern California aircraft plants, but allowed Boeing workers a 4½-cent-an-hour boost—the maximum permitted under the "Little Steel" formula.

However, the board made pro-

Cloudburst Hits Two Areas; Homes, Sewers Flooded

Damages estimated at nearly $1,500,000 to cellar-flooded homes, automobiles, sewers, powerlines and debris-ruined lawns and gardens resulted from yesterday afternoon's storm which first struck with cloudburst violence in the Petworth and Brightwood areas of northwest Washington.

Outbound Washington-to-Baltimore and suburban Virginia and Maryland traffic was halted by virtual flood conditions on Bladensburg rd., and drivers were forced to take precious gas-consuming detours via College Park Lane.

Under 2 Feet of Water

Sections of Rhode Island ave., connecting link between Hyattsville, Md., and Mount Rainier, were under 2 feet of water at 4 p. m., three-quarters of an hour before peak traffic.

One car was partly submerged in the underpass at Georgia and Silver Spring aves, as flood waters poured through the pass. Traffic had to be detoured until the water subsided.

In Northwest Washington, particularly in the Brightwood district, overtaxed sewers, unable to cope with the downpour, built up pressures so great that heavy manhole covers were sent rolling down streets from seven different locations.

Fire engines that could be spared from their normal 24-hour protective vigilance of the District, were dispatched to various sections to pump out flooded cellars.

In northeast Washington, the 2500 block of Rhode Island ave., and 14th and Newton sts. areas—storm violence ripped down live wires to cause further hazards.

Forts Hammer Plane Plants Near Paris

RAF Night Bombers Again Thunder Over Continent

By Edward D. Ball
Associated Press Staff Writer

London (Saturday), Sept. 4.—Flying Fortresses blasted Hitler's airplane factories near Paris by daylight yesterday, and after the powerful fleets had returned a great force of RAF night bombers thundered out toward the continent to resume the 24-hour triphammer blows at German war production.

Axis radios began leaving the air last night soon after the British bombers streamed across the Channel, indicating that Germany itself might have been the target for the night raiders.

(Antiaircraft guns at Malmoe on the southern tip of Sweden sent up the heaviest barrage of the war early today as an almost unbroken stream of foreign war planes passed over the coast for an hour. (Low clouds made it impossible to identify the planes, but it was believed they might be British raiders returning from another large scale attack upon Germany,

Silence Veiling Invasion Hints Further Blows

7th, 5th U. S. Armies Held Ready to Strike Anywhere in Basin

By William Smith White
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 3.—Official silence hiding the whereabouts of American forces in the invasion of Italy prompted speculation tonight that new landings would be made soon, perhaps including large-scale assault to the north of Italy's west coast to hit the enemy from the rear.

Silence regarding the menace of the Americans lay heavily over the enemy in the whole of the southern theater, and the Berlin radio said the Axis was prepared for "two or three blows against the continent" simultaneously.

As General Montgomery's Eighth Army of British and Canadians burst through the first barricade in the Axis defenses of Europe's continental mainland, there stood behind them the highly mechanized and heavily gunned forces of the American Seventh Army under Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., which had swept through two-thirds of Sicily in a record campaign to clear the way for today's invasion.

And somewhere in the Mediterranean another powerful American force the Fifth Army of Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark, awaited battle orders. This army under the cover of much secrecy has been training intensively in North Africa since last January.

Not only might some of these forces land above the Eighth Army, but some elements might join the British and Canadians in early moves.

Although the first landings put the British and Canadians on the longest path to Rome—and Berlin—the Allies have plenty of ships and planes to strike farther north and cut off the southern defenses

Allies Sink 3 Ships, Set 2 Afire In Raid on Japanese Convoy

By C. Yates McDaniel
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific (Saturday), Sept. 4.—Three 7000-ton Japanese freight transports were sunk and a destroyer and a fourth transport out of a seven-ship convoy were set ablaze by Allied planes in a raid Thursday morning on the harbor at Wewak, New Guinea, a communique announced today.

The communique said the Japanese tried frantically to protect the ships, sending in 35 fighter planes, of which 12 were downed for certain and 13 others probably destroyed or damaged. They also reported a balloon barrage.

The presence of the convoy and the Japanese efforts to shield it were taken to indicate the enemy intends to hold to Wewak, 350 miles above his tottering garrison at Salamaua, as a major operating base.

This was the first mention in months of Japanese convoys in the vicinity of northern New Guinea, where the enemy has relied almost entirely recently on barges for supply and reinforcement.

At Salamaua, headquarters said there was little change in ground positions but that the Japanese had suffered heavy losses in fighting south of the airdrome.

Mitchell medium bombers with a strong escort of lightnings made the attack on the convoy.

Chlorine Under Suspicion

Pollution Probers to Urge Supply Reservoir Project

Post Staff Writer.

The special committee investigating the pollution of Anacostia Reservoir yesterday agreed to push plans for the construction of a 10-million gallon supply reservoir at Fort Stanton Park and decided to test the entire supply of chlorine held by the District, The Post learned last night.

District officials, it was disclosed, are awaiting only a permit from the National Capital Parks, controlling Fort Stanton Park, to build the new reservoir, which will supplement, but not replace, the present first high reservoir.

Money is already in hand for the project, since the sum of $240,000 for this purpose was appropriated by Congress in the 1943 budget to run until June, 1944. Plans already have been drawn up by Whitman, Requhard & Smith of Baltimore for its construction.

The committee, headed by Col. Joseph A. Arthur, jr., Assistant Engineer Commissioner, decided upon a check of all chlorine supplies used to purify water here after fears were expressed that some of the chlorine was over-age. The United States District Engineer's office disclosed that chlorine has been added at the first high reservoir at Anacostia since 1933.

In view of the Health Department's finding that the water supply, which serves five military establishments as well as civilians in Anacostia, had been polluted by bacillus coli, the investigating committee questioned the strength of the chlorine used. Fears were expressed that the chlorine was so old it has lost its strength.

'No Surprise,' Says Axis of Invasion

Risks Death

Underground Work Aided Allied Thrust

By the Associated Press

Madrid, Sept. 3.—A fortnight of sabotage by underground forces, aimed at communication lines, supply dumps, repair shops and airfields, has helped pave the way for Allied invasion of continental Italy, according to reports reaching here.

To the accuracy of the Allied bombings has been added persistent wrecking behind the lines by Italians willing to risk the firing squad in order to make the invasion of Italy easier and bring an earlier end of the war.

Saboteurs have been active particularly against railroads and rolling stock, according to reports reaching Italians here and received through neutrals. As a result locomotives are scare in southern Italy, although they have been guarded day and night by German soldiers.

Germans found locomotives left under the guard of Italian soldiers frequently were sabotaged, it was said.

Representatives of the Yugoslav government in Madrid said Gen. Draja Mihailovic and his partisans remain in radio communication with the Allies "and will strike only when their action is coordinated with Allied action."

These guerillas already may be feeling the effect of the Allied invasion, however, for Italians have been saying for weeks a continental landing would start a trek of Italian troops from the Balkans to the homeland.

News from the French-Spanish frontier this morning said the landing led to a burst of activity among certain garrisons along the French Mediterranean coast.

Spanish correspondents in Berlin recently reported the official German view that an attack on southern Italy was likely to be simultaneous with attacks against Sardinia and Corsica and perhaps the French coast.

Rome and Berlin Have Tough Time Explaining Things

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 3.—The beleaguered Axis called the Allied invasion of the Italian mainland today "no surprise," but reaction as expressed through the two propaganda machines ranged from silence in the first few hours to nervous professions of optimism.

Both Rome and Berlin seemed to have a tough time explaining satisfactorily how the Allies succeeded in setting foot on the ramparts of Adolf Hitler's "fortress of Europe."

The Berlin radio gave details of the invasion, emphasizing all the time that the storming of Italy had been expected. Rome in a carefully worded communique told the Italians that the conquerors had come.

Appeal to Soldiers

In an apparent attempt to rouse Italian soldiers to genuine resistance of the Allied forces, the Rome radio in a broadcast recorded by the Associated Press said:

"A new period began for our country today when the enemy set foot on our peninsula.

"It is our duty to match our heroism with theirs. It is our duty in the face of the growing enemy threat to strengthen our unity of spirit."

The broadcast added that Italians must "become a marble rock of energy and concentrate all our energies in order to take up the defense of our land and our honor."

Rome added that national independence was at stake and was "the one issue that must supplant all others."

The broadcast concluded, "therefore, let us gather around the monarchy and face the present situation with all the moral and material means at our disposal."

Capt. Ludwig Sertorius, military commentator of the German news agency DNB, took the unusual line that the Allied landings in force with strong air and naval support was exactly what the defenders wanted.

Tries to Quiet Fears

Apparently trying to quiet fears of other immediate invasions, he said that if the Allies are now employing their maximum forces against the Italian mainland, then Italy will become Europe's battlefield and the probability of a second front threat to France or the Balkans will have vanished.

He hastened to add, however, that from statements by Prime Minister Churchill in his recent Quebec speech it can be deduced that "the potential of the Anglo-Americans is so great as to allow them to deliver two or three blows against the continent."

After starting off the day telling the German public there was nothing to report "from any of the fronts," the Berlin radio finally told of the invasion hours after the Allies had announced it.

French Committee Attacks Petain, Other Vichyites

Algiers Sept. 3 (AP).—The French Committee of National Liberation, meeting under the presidency of Gen. Charles De Gaulle, approved today a sweeping indictment against Marshal Philippe Petain and other members of his Vichy government and voted to bring them to justice "as soon as circumstances permit."

The committee guaranteed to "assure as soon as circumstances permit an action of justice in regard to Marshal Petain and those participating in the pseudo government formed by him which capitulated, struck at the constitution, collaborated with the enemy, delivered French workers to the Germans and made French forces fight against the Allies or against the French who continued the struggle."

Vatican City Governor Bound For United States

London, Sept. 3 (AP).—Enrico Galeazzi, governor of Vatican City, left Lisbon by clipper Wednesday night for the United States, a Reuters dispatch reported today. The purpose of his visit was not disclosed, Reuters said, but there was speculation here on the possibility that it was connected with negotiations to make Rome an open city.

Galeazzi came to the United States in October, 1941.

A Swiss telegraphic agency dispatch from Vatican City said the possibility was not excluded that Galeazzi was the bearer of a personal message from Pope Pius XII to President Roosevelt.

an open manhole, the cover of which a minute before had been blown off by water pressure built up in the street's sewer.

The vicinity of 13th st. and Delafield pl. nw. was nine feet under water during the storm's height, it was reported. At this point an unidentified family was rescued from an automobile that was engulfed.

From Takoma Park came reports of marooned families.

Beach Drive in Rock Creek Park was flooded as the creek overflowed its banks.

Within an hour after first calls from alarmed housewives were received. District Water Department vehicles and Fire Department engines and motor pumps, manned by 6-man crews, were on various flood scenes to drain cellars and low intersections.

Communications between park police headquarters and police lodge houses in Rock Creek division were out of service an hour after the storm hit.

By quitting time, several thousand workers in civil and Government offices found themselves in a free for all tussle for cab privileges and places aboard buses and street cars.

Traffic Snarled

The rain snarled metropolitan traffic. Rain damage which, with later estimates to be made today, may go well above $1,500,000.

The Weather Bureau said that exactly on einch of rain fell between 2:30 a. m. yesterday and 8:30 p. m. and .47 inch during the heavy storm between 2:30 p. m. and 8:30 p. m.

Passengers on a street car leaving 14th and Decatur sts. might as well have stayed out in the rain. Leaks all over the roof of the out moded car forced passengers to huddle miserably.

"It's a boat," laughed the conductor, who told the passengers that the car, among other retired ancients of the system, had been pressed into service to help relieve the expected rush of traffic.

Cabmen had a field day, while a cleaner on G st., watching raincoat and umbrella-less rain scurriers getting soaked, murmured happily, "There'll be a lot of business tomorrow."

In Riverside, Md., automobile traffic came to a standstill as the water level rose over hubcaps.

The rain drifting southward toward evening, had thoroughly drenched outlying suburban and rural areas, probably saving late growing vegetable crops and renewing earlier drought-parched pasturages in the dairy sections, to lessen the urban damage sting.

vision for a reclassification of Boeing rates similar to a reclassification scheme ordered for southern California.

Morse's View

At the closed meeting it was understood that Public Member Wayne L. Morse elicited from company representatives the admission that the proposed plan was being advanced because it provided wage increases for all employes. Morse was said to have stated that he did not plan to support any scheme to permit the board to do by indirection what it once refused to do directly.

Morse dissented from the original decision on the ground that the 4½ cents granted was not adequate "in the light of rates paid for comparable work in the Seattle area" (by shipyards).

Nelson was said to have advised the board that the country was losing approximately 50 Flying Fortresses a month from Boeing and that wage adjustments were required as part of a coordinated governmental program to solve the company's manpower difficulties.

Precedent Seen

The proposed schedules, combined with the proposed incentive plan, would bring Boeing wage rates within reach of West Coast shipbuilding scales.

It was understood that any decision in the Boeing case will serve as a precedent for a reconsideration of the board's action with respect to the southern California companies.

Meanwhile, a session of the War Mobilization Committee on the aircraft manpower problem was postponed from yesterday to today. The program mentioned by Nelson is being developed for announcement in about a week, it was understood.

Third of Jap Cargo Fleet Sunk—Knox

John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Allied naval and air forces have sent one-third of Japan's vitally important merchant marine to the bottom during the past 21 months of war, Secretary Knox announced yesterday.

This telling blow—largely the work of American submarines—already is proving embarrassing to the Tokyo warlords in maintaining and exploiting their vast conquered empire, the Navy chief said. And, he added, the rate of destruction is mounting.

Knox reported that more than 2,500,000 tons of Nipponese merchant ships have been sunk in the war to date—one-third of the tonnage Japan had at the beginning of hostilities plus ships built or acquired since. The loss would aggregate more than 500 vessels.

The Navy Secretary took occasion, in connection with the announcement, to highly praise the United States Navy 'submarine force.

Revealing that submarines—largely American—have destroyed 77 per cent of the total Japanese shipping loss, Knox said:

"The submarine service has been doing an outstanding and a perfectly splendid job in the Pacific. I can not say too much of its work."

The other 23 per cent of the total, the Secretary said, was accounted for by planes, surface warships and all other causes.

The Nipponese Empire is linked together by water supply routes and if these lines of communications can be cut or severely strained, the enemy will be unable to maintain his island defense system or exploit the riches of the newly conquered territory.

Some Withdrawals

To what extent the Japs have already been weakened by shipping losses is a matter of conjecture. Already, however, Tokyo has had to withdraw from some outposts due to supply difficulties.

Secretary Knox, in this connection, said he didn't know the reason for the enemy's withdrawal from Kiska, but said that supply difficulties must have been one of the main reasons.

Japan's estimated cargo tonnage at the beginning of the war was 6,368,891 tons, he said. In addition, the enemy has built or seized since then about 1,250,000 tons on the basis of these published estimates.

"We've sunk a third of this," Knox stated. One-third of the total is 2,539,630 but the Secretary referred to the loss by the round figure "more than 2,500,000 tons.

And, the Secretary declared, our submarine force in the Pacific and the rate of its destruction of enemy ships are constantly increasing.

Machinists Negotiate For Return to AFL

By the Associated Press

Negotiations for the return of the International Association of Machinists to the American Federation of Labor are taking place, official sources disclosed yesterday, and some progress has been made.

The IAM, headed by Harvey W. Brown, quit the federation last spring as the result of a long-standing jurisdictional fight with the carpenters.

The AFL council is divided in its sympathies in the fight. William L. Hutcheson, president of the carpenters, frequently had threatened to withdraw from the federation if his union was not upheld.

Where Allies Drive Into Italy

NEW BATTLEGROUND—This map shows the Calabrian Peninsula, toe of the Italian boot, where Allied troops have made their first landing in the invasion of the European continent. Reggio Calabria and Scilla are occupied by British and Canadians, Germans indicate

German strength to cover the Allied threats in the West.

The Moscow bulletin said the Germans were "retreating under the blow of Soviet troops" in the Donets, and "mining roads, constructing obstacles and blowing up bridges" in apparent abondonment of the huge region so rich in vital war ores.

Of the more than 11,000 Germans killed yesterday on the entire front, Moscow said 4000 of them fell in a fighting retreat westward from the Donets Basin. The rapidity of the flight also was indicated in the communique's declaration that 54 German tanks and more than 600 trucks had been destroyed, and great quantities of intact equipment seized.

Bearing out the indication of a precipitate German withdrawal from the Donets was the savage resistance being put up by Axis forces south and southwest of Kharkov. The Russians have not announced any significant progress in this area for days, and the latest bulletin told of "ferocious enemy counterattacks" in the region.

Thus the Germans apparently were protecting the withdrawal of their exposed forces in the Donets to the southeast. A Russian breakthrough south of Kharkov would cut off that retreat.

150 Localities Reoccupied

Altogether the Russians reoccupied 150 localities in the Donets Basin, the Soviet bulletin said, in continuing forward plunges ranging from nine to 12 miles deep in the German lines established since the fall of 1941.

Overrunning the Bryansk-Kiev railway above Konotop in the converging movement directed both against the rail junction and the big base of Bryansk, the Russians indicated their troops now held a 60-mile stretch of that vital line connecting the sagging German central and southern fronts.

Kiev, Ukraine capital, is now only 135 miles from the nearest Russian troops.

In a second swift drive westward across the northern Ukraine the Red army gained from 9 to 12 miles and ran through 100 populated places, including Altynovka, only 14 miles north of the big rail junction of Konotop. The town of Putivl, 30 miles northeast of the big Axis base, also fell.

Konotop thus was threatened with imminent seizure by Red army units that already had captured a big stretch of the Bryansk-Kiev railway above that city.

20,000 Square Miles

These Red army advances brought the total area recaptured from the Germans since the beginning of the July 12 drive to more than 20,000 square miles along the 600-mile active front.

The new line, still fluid as the offensive appeared to gain strength daily, already showed the recapture of some 230,000 square miles by the Russians since the time of the greatest Nazi advances, which carried to the highwater mark of Stalingrad.

another 350 air-line miles to the Brenner Pass.

The Germans and Italians have had months to prepare fortifications on the intervening mountains overhanging the coastal roads which are the most feasible routes of invasion. Most of the German forces, however, are believed entrenched in northern Italy.

But political repercussions from the invasion may play an even more important part than the military factors involved. The strike into Sicily routed Mussolini and his Fascists and installed the Badoglio regime which thus far has held a war-weary people largely in check. Obviously, Allied leaders hope the new invasion will knock out Italy and open the first glaring crack in the Axis camp.

Weeks of intensive land, sea and air bombardment preceded the stab into southern Italy. Railroad yards, coastal roads, arsenals and supply dumps were devastated by Allied airmen.

British Commandos also landed on the coast in the last few days to reconnoiter strong points, wiping out some gun emplacements. Most of these Commandos returned to Sicily with valuable information despite Axis broadcasts declaring the bulk of them had been caught and annihilated.

The Germans knew the invasion was imminent, judging by their declarations and their military operations of the last few days. This only underscored their inability to prevent the landing.

A paramount question is the degree to which Italian troops will join the Germans in fighting on the mainland. In Sicily, whole battalions surrendered, but others fought bitterly until they were wiped out or escaped to the mainland.

Military men here sought to discourage undue optimism, and said the allied peoples must be prepared to accept a long and savage fight in Italy.

The Allies chose the fourth anniversary of the British and French entry into the war against Germany for the invasion. It came 17 days after the 38-day conquest of Sicily, and was the first foothold established by the western Allies on the European mainland since the British were driven out of Greece late in April, 1941.

probably upon Berlin or some Baltic port.)

The Caudron-Renault Aircraft factory on Paris' outskirts and an assembly plant nearby were the targets for the daylight raid by the big our-engined American bombers. Marauders and fighters also swarmed across the channel yesterday to give western Europe one of its worst bomb-lashings of the war.

Five airfields in northern France were drubbed by the heavy and medium bombers in a furious two-ply blow against Nazi air strength in roaring accompaniment to the invasion of Italy, and 29 enemy planes were shot from the skies during the day.

The Fortresses, ripping through determined clouds of enemy defenders, shot down 23 and planted heavy bombs on the important Caudron-Renault factory and the assembly plant at Meulan les Mureaux northwest of the French capital. The last raid on the Paris area was a Fortress attack on Villacoublay airfield August 24. Renault factories were attacked by Fortresses last April, and by the RAF last year.

Few German fighters challenged the other fleets hitting the five airdromes, and Allied protecting fighters smacked down six of them, four falling to P-47 Thunderbolts and two to Spitfires.

One of the fields hit was Romilly-sur-Seine, 75 miles from Paris. It was attacked by Fortresses with Thunderbolt escorts, with bombs laid on hangars and on or near workshops.

Eight heavy bombers and two fighters were lost, a joint American-British communique announced tonight.

A Nazi broadcast said the industrial western suburbs of Paris were hard hit, and that some bombs fell in the center of the French capital for the first time.

The Paris radio said two subway stations were hit, causing numerous casualties.

Britons and Americans at a war anniversary in London were thrilled by the spectacle of 150 homing Fortresses which droned overhead.

Czechs Told To Prepare All Weapons

London, Sept. 3 (AP).—Gen. Sergej Ingr, commander in chief of the Czech army, sounded the old Hussite battle cry, "Beat them, kill them, leave none alive," in a broadcast from London today urging Czechs to prepare for the day of uprising against the Germans.

"Everyone should look around now for the most appropriate weapon in order to harm the Germans most," Ingr said. "If there is no firearm at hand, any other kind of weapon that cuts, stabs or hits should be prepared and hidden."

The general called the coming year a "year of victory."

Nazi Exodus From Greece

New York, Sept. 3 (AP).—The British radio said today the Germans "are evacuating civilians from Greece, and all German women must leave the country before September 20."

The broadcast, recorded by CBS, said 15 persons, including a priest, had been executed in Greece in reprisal for the killing of a German soldier.

Mine Kills Red Officials

Moscow, Sept. 3 (AP).—Mikhail Vasiev, vice chief of the press department, and Viktor Kozhemiako, 30, a censor, were killed while accompanying foreign correspondents on a trip to the front Wednesday when their automobile ran over a buried mine. Foreign correspondents following a car behind were not hurt.

ments which have been pouring into Italy is now clogged with wreckage at least temporarily," a headquarters announcement said.

This railroad snaking down from Brenner Pass carries half of all traffic between Germany and Italy, 95 per cent of the oil needed for the Axis war machine in Italy, and 80 per cent of Italy's steel and coal requirements.

Only one Fortress was lost in the long unescorted plunge, described officially as "perhaps the best day the Fortresses from North Africa ever had."

At Bolzano, they scored direct hits on the main tracks and on the railway bridge, sent ledges from overhanging cliffs tumbling onto the rail lines, and hit the station. Four enemy planes were shot down there.

Two important river bridges were damaged at Trento, and a highway bridge was broken.

Cargoes of high explosives tore up the railway yards, warehouses and railway cars at Bologna, and great fires were set.

Thirty-four enemy planes were destroyed during all of yesterday's widespread flights, and 15 Allied planes were missing.

Mitchell bombers blew up camouflaged enemy positions near Reggio Calabria, A-6 attack bombers struck the freight yards at Lamezi and Catanzaro, and RAF and South African Baltimores and Bostons hammered troops and gun positions on the Italian toe.

A-6's touched off an ammunition dump at Sapri on the west coast, and P-40 Warhawks hit a barge and scored near hits on seven others in the Gulf of Santa Eufemia.

The Mitchells and Lightning escorts raiding Cancello were attacked by 60 to 70 enemy fighters to touch off one of the heaviest dogfights ever waged over Italian soil. The fight continued out to sea.

Besides the disruption of the railroads in the Naples area and below the Brenner Pass, official reports also disclosed that the Fortress raid on Pisa on the northwest coast of Italy on Tuesday had blocked all railroads from Pisa to Leghorn, Florence, the naval base of La Spezia, and Marina di Pisa, while the coastal railway and the city's freight yards were damaged heavily.

Iron Works Reported To Have Defied Government Order

President Roosevelt yesterday directed Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, War Shipping Administrator, to seize and operate the Atlantic Basin Iron Works, Brooklyn, N. Y., after the company flatly refused to accept a War Labor Board order for maintenance of union membership and arbitration.

The Chief Executive directed Land to "take such steps as may be necessary or desirable" to carry out the War Labor Board order.

The plant was the first to be seized under the Connally-Smith Antistrike Act. Since the start of the prewar defense emergency, the President has used seizure powers in labor disputes (involving three union defiances and four employer defiances), but the actions were taken under general emergency powers.

At Request of WLB

The order provided Government operation of the company, which converts and repairs ships, would be terminated within 60 days after President Roosevelt "determines that the productive efficiency of the plant prevailing prior to the taking possession thereof has been restored."

WLB officials interpreted this provision as meaning the Government would retain possession of the plant until the company agreed to the board order, or until other arrangements to operate the concern had been made.

Public Member Wayne L. Morse, compliance officer of the WLB, took the case to the White House early yesterday after the company had notified him it would not comply.

In a report to the President made public by the White House, Morse said:

"It obviously is not fair to law-abiding employers and unions to permit a party in any given dispute to defy successfully wartime labor policies ordered by the Government, as is being attempted by the Atlantic Basin Iron Works Co. in the instant case. Therefore, the WLB by unanimous vote recommends the plant of the company be possessed and operated by the Government in accordance with the War Labor Disputes Act and until such time as the company agrees to comply with the board's order."

Company Stands Firm

The maintenance of membership and arbitration order was handed down originally by the WLB's Shipbuilding Commission on June 3, but the company flatly refused to comply. On August 18, WLB assumed jurisdiction under the Connally-Smith law, and on August 25, the company again refused to comply.

A third refusal to comply was received from its president, Bernard Moran on Wednesday. Moran advised the board he had received many letters expressing "admiration for his independence" from all parts of the country.

Americans Join In Day of Prayer In London Square

London, Sept. 3 (AP).—In the heart of London o nthe square where American military quarters is situated, United States soldiers, sailors, marines and WACS joined the British today in observing their national day of prayer with a promise that the bridgehead established in Southern Italy would be extended for the liberation of all subjugated Europe.

In a message on this, the fourth anniversary of Britain's entry into the war, Lieut. Gen. Jacob L. Devers, American commander in the European theater, asserted:

"Our prayers today are linked with action. . . . This is the first of the bridgeheads which in the fifth year of war, with God's help, we will establish and breach the fortresses of Europe on land, even as it already has been breached from the air.

"Its annihilation is certain. During the fifth year of their suffering the peoples of the occupied lands may hopefully turn their eyes toward deliverance."

More WACS Arrive In North Africa

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Sept. 3 (AP).—A new detachment of WACS arrived today to take over clerical jobs at Allied headquarters, supporting the fighting men who moved onto the Italian mainland just a few hours earlier.

Wearing steel helmets and carrying heavy packs on their backs, the girls lined up in military formation to be greeted by Maj. Gen. E. S. Hughes, deputy theater commander, who said, "We're glad to see you; we've been waiting for you a long time. We'll house and feed you and make you work like hell."

Hoover Warns Against Haste In Drafting Peace Program

By the Associated Press

Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 3.—Former President Herbert Hoover tonight declared "victory is now inevitable," and said the United Nations should refrain from too much haste in drawing up final peace settlements after the war.

In a speech for delivery before the Foreign Policy Association and the University of Minnesota, Hoover declared "the world must have time to cool off and recover a balance of judgment if a lasting peace is to be made." He continued:

"When firing ceases the world will be filled with violent emotions. There will be white-hot hate and indignation at the enemy for having brought the world to this state. The air will be filled with vengeance. This is no atmosphere for long-view statesmanship, which must distinguish between guilty leadership and misled peoples."

The former President said that if the world had five years in which to consider the Treaty of Vienna in 1814 and the Treaty of Versailles in 1919, those documents never would have been signed. He recalled that "the six years between the victory of Yorktown and adoption of the Constitution of the United States was time well spent."

He proposed that peace be arranged in four steps:

One, agreement before firing ceases that a few leading nations among the Allies be appointed joint managers of peace and that there will not be the usual armistice or general peace conference.

Two, agreement before victory that these peace managers shall impose provisional peace terms on defeated nations.

Three, that nothing else be done until expiration of a transition period of several years "in which the world can cool off."

Four, creation of "some sort of world institution to replace the managers and preserve peace."

Montgomery Says There'll Be Only One End—Success

By the Associated Press

With the British Eighth Army Which Invaded Italy, Sept. 3.—Gen. Sir Bernarl L. Montgomery addressed a personal message to his eighth army troops just before they attacked the Italian mainland. Telling them there could be but one end to the battle—success.

This was his message:

"Having captured Sicily as our first slice of the Italian home country, the time has now come to carry the battle onto the mainland of Italy.

"To the eighth army has been given the great honor of being the first troops of the Allied armies to land on the mainland of the continent of Europe.

"We have a good plan and air support on a greater scale than we ever had before.

"There can only be one end to this next battle—another success.

"Forward to victory.

"Let us knock Italy out of the war.

"Good luck, and God bless you all."

Apple-Crop Workers Sought

Thousands of bushels of apples in Maryland and Virginia will be wasted unless vacation workers come forward immediately to help save the crop, Fred Z. Hetzel, acting area director of the War Manpower Commission stated yesterday after receiving reports from the Washington United States Employment Office.

"In an unusually critical time—a war year such as we are going through today, we cannot afford to let this happen," Hetzel said.

Sounding an appeal for vacation workers to spend at least one week harvesting apples and other crops, the WMC director explained he had instructed USES Farm Recruiting Officer John W. Jones and other officials to immediately contact personnel offices in the Government and private firms to call their attention to this drastic crop emergency.

Jones informed Hetzel in his report he had received orders for 10,840 man weeks on farms, mostly in orchards picking apples and late peaches. Which means if a worker spends one work week at harvesting, it will take that many individuals in Federal and private industry as a minimum necessary to accomplish the job of saving the crops.

"Thus far," said Hetzel, "every order for workers forwarded to the USES District of Columbia office has been filled on time. It indicates also sufficient workers have registered to take care of all demands for labor through Labor Day."

Of a total of 882 Federal employes who have signed up with the farm recruiting officer, for assignment as vacation workers, 497 already are working or have returned to Washington after completing their vacation stints, it was explained.

The remaining 385 will leave today or Monday for farms in Virginia or Maryland.

"Droughts have curtailed certain crops sharply," Hetzel pointed out, "therefore we must give farmers the labor assistance necessary to assure the remaining crops being harvested."

Hetzel urged those who may help alleviate the emergency to contact the USES office at Employment Center, 501 K st. nw., at once. The farm recruiting officer there will give full details and sgin up work volunteers, he said.

Probers Urge New Supply Reservoir

matic chlorination installed at the Anacostia new high reservoir was reached yesterday. Until such installation the reservoir will be kept free from pollution by the addition of chlorine.

The Health Department yesterday issued a second reassurance that the water was now potable and safe. Like all the water supply in the District, the Anacostia supply is constantly checked.

Presence of pollution was first discovered by the Health Department in July, and additional chlorine was immediately ordered.

Tests were made which showed that pollution apparently was in the reservoir and not in the two 30-inch mains leading to Anacostia, since the water tested before it went in the mains and as it came out showed no pollution.

One official present at yesterday's conference said that possibly ground seepage accounted for the pollution which was overcome as chlorine was added.

Besides Colonel Arthur, members of the investigating committee are Maj. John B. Gordon, District sanitary engineer; Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant health officer, and a representative of the U. S. District Engineer's Office.

2 Leaders Follow Invasion News

miral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the American fleet.

Churchill took time out from his talks on many phases of the war to buy the first $100 bond in the Treasury's Third War Bond Drive from Secretary Morgenthau. Here he made his only public reference to Britain's war anniversary, with this comment on the war's progress: "We certainly have a right to be thankful that we are in such good posture after such a long period of peril and tribulation."

Earlier, at a press conference, Secretary Hull was asked what advice he would give the Italian people in view of the landing in Italy. Hull referred reporters to the joint address to the Italian people by Roosevelt and Churchill and to Gen. Dwight F. Eisenhower's invasion message to Italy in July.

Eisenhower had called on Italians to facilitate "the lifting of the Nazi yoke," promising Italy would be restored as a free nation after German overlordship of Europe is destroyed. But the President had said that the terms to Italy are still "unconditional surrender."

Andrei A. Gromyko, Soviet Ambassador designate, conferred with the Secretary on what Hull described as more or less regular and routine matters. Gromyko was noncommittal with reporters on the subject of his visit, but when the invasion of Italy was mentioned, he smiled and said: "That's good news."

Churchill Buys First $100 Bond In New Drive

Prime Minister Winston Churchill yesterday purchased the first $100 bond in the Treasury's Third War Loan Drive with a forecast that full subscription of the 15 billion dollar issue will "appreciably" shorten the war.

Churchill, dressed in a white cotton suit, and clutching his inseparable cigar, received the bond from Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau in a ceremony before camera and newsmen in the White House diplomatic cloakroom.

Ahead of Schedule

The drive is not officially slated to get under way until September 9, but Morgenthau touched it off ahead of schedule. He told the British Prime Minister his action should inspire 50 million Americans to purchase an extra $100 form.

Churchill said he intended to hand the bond over to his wife to sell for the benefit of her Russian relief fund, providing Morgenthau can arrange the "legal details," adding: "That brings us all together on what is this joyous occasion." He said the bond probably would bring "several thousand pounds" at auction in England.

In top form, the Prime Minister mingled humor with his serious appeal for "utmost support" of the bond drive.

"I have often thought, Mr. Secretary," he said, "you must be one of the bravest men in the world and that you ought to have the congressional medal of honor and the Victoria cross and all the other decorations of the Allies for being able to lie down at night and sleep quietly amongst all these atronomical figures of modern finance. You have borne this burden with success."

Turning serious again he recalled that this was the fourth anniversary of British entry into the war.

"We certainly have a right to be extremely thankful that we are in such good posture after such a long period of peril and tribulation," he said. "This loan will undoubtedly have the effect of appreciably affecting the shortening of the struggle if fully subscribed. But if it fails, it would entail a prolongation. For that reason everyone should give it utmost support."

with 1000-pound bombs on three freighter transports, each of 7000 tons sinking them," today's communique said.

"In addition, one of the escorting warships and a 1000-ton cargo ship sustained direct hits and were left ablaze."

Damaging "near hits" were reported in the communique to have been scored by reconnaissance bombers on two more ships in the New Ireland vicinity, a 7000-ton vessel off Cape St. George and a 5000-ton cargo ship west of Mussau Island.

Across the Vitiaz Strait from New Guinea's Huon Peninsula, a 60-ton raid was reported made on the Cape Gloucester, New Britain, airdrome. Eleven enemy fighters were intercepted. Seven were shot down and two others were listed as probably destroyed. One Allied bomber was reporting missing.

In the Solomons, another of a growing series of raids was directed at Japan's big Kahili airdrome on South Bougainville. American fighters destroyed four Japanese planes on the ground and inflicted casualties among enemy personnel. Two launches and a barge were destroyed along the shore. The raid cost the Americans one plane.

if the gonig there is too slow or too rough.

Such a short-cut thrust also would speed the capture of Italy's harbor at Naples and accelerate progress toward Foggia and Bari, where there are big airfields only about 550 miles from the Rumanian oil fields and relatively near to other central European targets.

A Long Way Back

It was the British and Canadians, elements of the hard, tough and gallant British Eighth Army, who formed the bridgehead in the area of Reggio Calabria and became the first Allied fighting men to set foot on the mainland and stay since the tragedy of Greece.

For the men of the Eighth Army it had been a long way back—2050 miles since Alamein—but today on the fourth anniversary of Britain's declaration of war they were not alone with the weight of the Americans still to be brought to bear.

The Axis desperately tried to guess the real scope of the plan of the supreme Allied commander, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, and whether he intended far more than was immediately apparent and whether other and greater forces now being held back would leap at other points.

Two Points Apparent

With the usual secrecy covering much of the action, two points were already apparent or at all events highly probable:

1. General Eisenhower's minimum immediate design was to clean up Messina Strait on both sides, thus immensely relieving the Allied supply and communications problem and freeing Allied fleets to cruise up and down the coast of Italy, laying the whole country bare to landings if they are deemed necessary and advisable.

2. Opinion was strong in London that it was in one sense a political offensive as well, intended to cause among the Italian people, who have long been clamoring for peace, such an upheaval as to force the Badoglio government to get out of the war or possibly give him the opportunity to do so.

It was believed by many here that the Badoglio government's will to war is by no means strong, and that its position is like that of the axed tree which might fall with an encouraging push.

Labor Union Aid in Price Control Sought

Labor union aid was enlisted by District OPA officials last night to help in price control programs as Robert K. Thompson, local OPA director, announced plans for creating a District OPA community council to aid in enforcing price and rationing control.

The OPA Labor Advisory Committee, gathered at Ration Board No. 11, 1740 Massachusetts ave. nw., was urged to encourage labor unions they represent to aid in the OPA price panel program.

The labor representatives were told 190 of the volunteer price panels have been set up here in the past six weeks, but 1000 are needed to combat black market practices.

The panels are neighborhood committees who help educate retailers and enforce OPA grocery ceilings. A new community price list to aid in enforcement will be issued within two weeks.

The OPA Labor Advisory Committee consists of four representatives from each of the three main union bodies, the CIO, the AFL and the railway unions.

Plans for creation of a community council will be discussed by representatives of leading civic organizations with OPA officials at a meeting Thursday at 3 p. m. in the U. S. Chamber of Commerce Building, 1615 H st. nw.

Thompson said one of the first activities of the council will be formation of plans for a "Home Front Pledge Campaign" in October. The objective will be to obtain signed pledges from consumers and retailers supporting price and rationing programs.

Thompson said the council will provide a two-way flow of information between the District OPA and the community.

Oscar R. Ewing Suggested to Succeed Welles

Frank C. Walker, Postmaster General and chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has suggested to Secretary Hull, it became known yesterday, that Oscar R. Ewing, vice chairman of the Democratic committee, be appointed Undersecretary of State. Ewing would succeed Sumner Welles, whose resignation has been widely reported though not officially announced.

Justice Ferdinand Pecora of the New York State Supreme Court, former member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, had a lengthy conference with Secretary Hull in support of the suggestion and it was reported that the Secretary appeared receptive.

Ewing is said to represent the Aluminum Co. of America, through his law firm of Hughes, Richards, Hubbard & Ewing.

Black Market Gas Sales Cited Anew

A resurgence in black market sales of gasoline in Washington within the last two weeks was revealed last night by John L. Laskey, local OPA enforcement attorney.

While Laskey withheld any comment on whether the recurrence of "serious" instances of black market sales was attributable to the lifting of the pleasure driving ban, the date he named for the noticeable increase coincided with the lifting of the ban.

Laskey said the OPA had received information that had resulted in its concentrating enforcement efforts on this violation of the OPA rules.

Laskey said the OPA had information that some stations were simply selling without coupons and that others were "trafficking" in coupons.

At the same time O. T. King, acting manager of the Keystone Club of Washington, asserted that his organization had notified national OPA that as the result of widespread and flagrant black market operations in the Midwest the anticipated additional supplies for the East had not materialized.

King said he had urged OPA to set up rationing controls that would insure an adequate supply of gasoline for all sections.

Finn Parliament Considers Peace

Stockholm, Sept. 3 (AP).—The Finnish Parliament, in a secret session lasting an hour and 10 minutes today, discussed means of getting Finland out of her military alliance with Germany and making a separate peace with Russia.

Parliament took no action, but the best information was that the members generally were pro-Allied.

Institutional Laundries Rated 2d in Dirt Removal

Commercial and hotel laundries do a better job of removing dirt and bacteria than do hospital and institutional laundries, a survey submitted yesterday by the D. C. Health Department to the District Commissioners showed. The survey included 18 hospitals and institutions, 14 commercial laundries and 5 hotel laundries.

At the same time another survey conducted with the aid of the department of plumbing showed that in all laundries, only about 50 per cent of those visited had adequate washing facilities for the employes. Steps are now being taken in many cases to remedy the defects.

The investigation was started in July, 1942, by Dr. Daniel Seckinger, acting health officer; V. H. Troxler of the sanitation inspection service, and F. F. Aldridge, sanitary engineer loaned by the U. S. Public Health Service.

It showed that, notwithstanding flaws found here and there, laundries in general, operated in a clean manner.

Only two of 14 commercial laundries in the survey showed a poor result after bacterial tests; while 13 of 18 hospital and other institutions showed such a result.

Of drinking-water facilities, many fountains in both types of laundries were found to be without proper mouthguards, and particularly over-all insanitary conditions were found in 8 1-3 per cent of all establishments visited.

Officials said no large-scale health survey along these lines had ever before been taken in the District and it was planned to continue periodic check-ups.

The investigation was made to uncover:

1. General housekeeping and sanitation in the establishments.
2. Safety hazards in plant equipment.
3. Possibility of water pollution due to back-siphonage of polluted water into domestic drinking water. This last hazard was found to be virtually nil.
4. Wartime functions of laundry industry and to formulate a system of routine inspection of such establishments.

Hecht Action Test of OPA

Briefs are soon to be filed with the U. S. Supreme Court in the Hecht Co. case which will test the power of the Office of Price Administration over the Nation's merchants.

The Hecht Co. filed with the court an appeal to an injunction obtained by the OPA to restrain the Washington store from future violations of general maximum price regulations. The store seeks a reversal of a decision by the U. S. Court of Appeals which granted the injunction and ruled that the OPA was entitled to this remedy whenever a violation was found, even though unintentional.

Attorneys Spencer Gordon and Charles A. Horsky contend that the store did everything in its power to comply with OPA regulations, that any violations found were due to complexities in the voluminous regulations, and that an injunction was pointless since there would be no future violations "except such as may be caused by human frailties."

The case originally was heard in District Court, where Justice F. Dickinson Letts refused to grant the injunction, ruling that Congress did not intend that the courts must grant injunctions where violations were unintentional and not due to neglect. But the appelate court held that strict enforcement of the regulations was demanded by Congress and that injunctions were mandatory where previous violations had been found.

Youth Pleads Not Guilty

Howard L. Conway, 21, of Alexandria, Va., pleaded not guilty yesterday to an indictment charging six counts of second-degree murder in the traffic deaths of two elderly women on July 24. Conway was driving a moving van and the women were riding home in a "share-the-ride" automobile.

Charles Powell's Rites to Be Held This Afternoon

Funeral services for Charles Petitt Powell, 75, a District policeman for 26 years, will be held today at 2 p. m. at the Chambers Riverdale funeral home. Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemtery. Mr. Powell died Thursday at his home, 1605 Rhode Island ave. ne., after a long illness.

A veteran of the Spanish-American War, he was with Col. Theodore Roosevelt during the charge on San Juan Hill, and he served in the Army for nine years until discharged in 1900. A native of Garysburg, N. C., he then moved to Washington to work for the Capital Traction Co. The following year he was appointed to the police force and served until his retirement in 1927. He was commended by the Commissioners for his actions at the time of the bombing of the home of the late Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer in 1919, and for a time he served as a guard for President Wilson.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Jennie Powell; two daughters, Mrs. Alice Ward and Mrs. Ethel Johnson, and two grandchildren, all of Washington.

'Watch on the Rhine' Is The Greatest of War Plays

By Mary Harris

FROM THE WAR'S GREATEST STAGE PLAY to date has been evolved the most significant and thought provoking of wartime movies—"Watch on the Rhine," now at the Earle Theater. Few changes have been made from the stage play aside from the increased opulence and breadth of background that a cinema transformation always produces. An added final climax is an improvement over the original stage version in that it gives perspective to the great interrogation posed by "Watch on the Rhine."

Though its motif is the battle of the underground men against the Nazis, interpreted in the sharpest of dramatic terms, the ideology of "Watch on the Rhine" is far wider. In the story of one man it suggests the stories of men of good will in all countries. It's both cleansing and uncomfortably thought provoking. As Lucile Watson says comically toward the end of the play, "Well, we've been shaken out of the magnolias." You'll have few phony, flowery ideas left after seeing the "Watch."

As a production "Watch on the Rhine" is above criticism. Bette Davis is in top form, Lucile Watson lends a constant effervescence of sturdy good humor. But for all that the show belongs to one man. And the man is Paul Lukas.

The Lukas conception of a natural man of peace forced into the bloody trade of an underground revolutionary leader is unique and masterful beyond anything seen on the screen for a long time. He presents the modern paradox of a gentle intellectual, a good father and husband, who lays both himself and his family upon the altar of a hoped-for better world—with a stanch faith that he is not making a vain oblation.

As everyone out of grade school probably knows by now, "Watch on the Rhine" has its arena of action in Washington with a current of events sweeping from a suburban mansion to downtown, with a swirling side current into the German Embassy. Since most movies with a Washington background elicit squawks unlimited, are their errors in the Capital milieu, it's a pleasure to say that you'll find nothing of the sort in this picture. A couple of downtown shots are easily recognizable but you won't find the Capitol or Treasury popping up in impossible locations. We wouldn't know whether the interiors at the German Embassy are absolutely authentic, but for the sake of a little clean fun, let's hope they are.

Setting the tone of present day Europe, oddly enough, is the introductory part of the film showing Lukas, wife Bette Davis and their three children entering the United States from Mexico. The children revel in the "luxury" of an American day coach, but look dubiously at Southern shacks along the railroad, wonder innocently how many Americans live like that. But in Washington they find that their maternal grandmother, Lucile Watson is a jolly grande dame living in what'll do for a palace until a palace comes along and with dozens of bathrooms. (This return to her childhood home gives Bette Davis an opportunity for some delicately appealing acting. She even touches the chairs with a sort of childlike joy.)

But even the Land of the Free is no haven of safety for such men as Lukas. A sticky-fingered Rumanian count, house guest of his mother-in-law, and played with extraordinary dexterity and restraint by George Coulouris, develops the keen idea that Lukas has a secret that is worth money to the Nazis. He follows up this inspiration with a bit of burgling that convinces him he is on the right track.

How the Rumanian's plans are discovered and checkmated is a part of the plot that shouldn't be told. But the count is of interest only to an undertaker when it's all over. After a blasting scene that puts Lukas on top of the world as an actor. From a gentle and quiet man you see him suddenly transformed into a revolutionary killer, the kind of man who fought with the Loyalists in Spain, who strikes and strikes again from the darkness in Europe, who created the Underground Terror.

Those popular, deserving, smart and beautiful girls, the Earle's Roxyettes, are celebrating their fifth birthday at the theater. (And if it hadn't been that the "Watch on the Rhine" is such an important picture, we'd certainly have made the lead of this story all about the Roxyettes, who are our favorite people.)

A huge birthday cake covering most of the Earle stage gives due recognition to the Roxyette anniversary. The Roxyettes prance out in costumes matching their birthday cake (Harry Anger saw to that, naturally) and Maestro Jo Lombardi and his orchestra give them greetings and salutations.

As befits such a notable week, the Roxyettes are even better than their best. Which means that they're wonderful, just wonderful. Once they appear in a variety of Eton boy costume enriched with horn-rimmed glasses, are engagingly boyish and girlish at the same time. But they really go to the city in their finale based on "Minnie From Trinidad." Such tight Mexican trousers! Such wildly waving serapes! Such madly bouncing sombreros! Such vivacity! Such high kicking! Anyway, happy birthday, Roxyettes! And long may you wave!

But, hey, this is the end of the column.

Muni Film Made Star Out of Stone

Hollywood.—Ezra Stone, one of the chief performers in Irving Berlin's "This Is the Army," worked along with the rest of the soldiers on a strictly no-star basis in the motion picture version of the show at Warner Bros.

But he confessed that he might never have been a star at all if it hadn't been for a Warner Bros. picture several years ago.

After years of work, Ezra was due to get his name in lights on the Biltmore Theater marquee in New York. But the theater couldn't find a "Z" and Ezra wouldn't change his name.

"Ezra got his name in lights when a Warner Bros. picture finally closed a successful run a few doors away. He dug into his bankroll and bought the "Z" out of Paul Muni's "Zola."

Army Divides and Then Reunites

Hollywood.—Corpl. Murray Deutch and Pvt. Irving Deutch sang together in the same band—then joined the Army together, hoping they might be able to stick together. They just happened to be identical twins. But the Army sent them to camps thousands of miles apart. It took show business to reunite them. For when Uncle Sam turned producer and put on Irving Berlin's "This Is the Army," the two Deutches found each other in the same company a' the first rehearsal of the show. They're also in the Technicolor film version of the show which Warner Bros. made for Army Emergency Relief.

LEONARD LYONS

Durante Tells All

(Leonard Lyons is on vacation. His guest columnist today is Jimmy Durante.)

I'm sitting in my dressing room at the NBC studios waiting to go on the other Thursday night, when a page boy comes up, without knocking, and says:

"Lyons to see you, Jimmy." When you awake Jackson he opens one eye. If he thinks it's real important, then he opens the other eye. "Lyons is coming to see me," I says. "Lyons," yawns Jackson. "What Lyons?" . . . "Don't tell me you've never seen the Lyons Den?" . . . I says in a superior tone.

JIMMIE DURANTE

Jackson shakes his head. "I'm allergic to animals," he says. "I never go near the zoo." "This is Leonard Lyons," I explains. "As famous as Gypsy Rose Lee as a writer—although Gypsy is a heck of a lot prettier." . . . "Go on," says Jackson. "Proceed. Tell me more. Especially about Gypsy Rose Lee."

Jack Roth, my drummer, who comes to every one of my broadcasts, because he likes the sliding seats in the NBC studios, takes a pack of cigarettes out of my coat pocket and lights a match on my $400 dresser, being careful to go with the grain. "What does this Lyons want?" . . . "He wants to write a column about me," I says proudly. "What is Robert Taylor got that I ain't got?" . . . "What has Frank Sinatro got that a bullfrog ain't got?" sneers Roth.

Before the argument gets a chance to become any more confused there's a knock on the door. "Jack," I says, "that must be Lyons now." Jack jumps up—and then sits down again. "What am I jumped up for?" he yodels. "This is my day off." . . . The door opens and in walks Lyons, a pencil and notebook in hand.

There's a short pause while Lyons sharpens his pencil with his teeth.

"Now suppose we get on with the interview, Jimmy," he begins. "What's the secret of your success?" I says, "The secret of my success is thinking a thing over and over till it's all over, then you don't have to think about it anymore."

"Jimmy, how old were you when you first set foot on the stage?" 'Now let me see," I says. "The Revolutionary War was in 1776—the California gold rush was in 1840 . . . The Civil War was in 1860 . . . The Wall Street crash was in 1929. Roosevelt was elected in 1932 . . . Yes . . . 1 year old.

"My early ambition," I recollects, "was to become a professional fighter. My record stands—one fight, two knockouts. I got both, one in the ring and one when I got home . . . My next venture in the business world was playing piano between rounds at the Hamilton A. C., Cherry and James Streets, and Maurice Adams coming in to plug songs for Kerry Mills.

"Then came vaudeville; then vaudeville went away again . . . The team of Clayton, Jackson and Durante dissolved. Clayton became my manager, and Jackson became my companion—and as for me, Hollywood was the next stop."

After Lyons had left, Roth puffed meditatively on my cigarette. "Nice feller," he said gruffly. Jackson nodded. "Yeah, and maybe he can write as well as Gypsy Rose Lee—but he certainly isn't half as pretty."

GOP Chiefs Plan Catch-All Foreign Policy Statement

By Jack Bell
Associated Press Staff Writer

Mackinac Island, Mich., Sept. 3. Exuding confidence they can fuse divergent viewpoints into a catch-all foreign policy declaration for the 1944 campaign, Republican leaders gathered here today for sessions of the party's postwar advisory council opening Monday.

Chairman Harrison E. Spangler of the national committee keynoted the hopeful attitude of the advance guard with a press conference prediction that the advisory group will point the direction the party is going so that all may see.

"I don't believe there will be any disagreement on fundamental policies," he told reporters in discussing what he described as the major problem of formulating a statement of the party's proposals for preserving the peace of the world after the war ends.

The same conciliatory attitude was displayed by Senator Austin of Vermont, representing the internationalist wing, who said he saw no reason why the Advisory Council should not pick up where the national committee left off with its Chicago resolution of April, 1942.

At that time the committee said the Republicans realized that the postwar responsibility of the Nation will not be circumscribed within the continental limitations of the United States and declared for "understanding, comity and cooperation among the nations of the world" to halt future wars.

On the other hand, Senator Vandenberg (Republican) of Michigan, who seems likely to emerge as the chief of the reservationists, made it plain he will insist that a heavy accent be laid on nationalism and the retention of full American sovereignty in any pledge to collaborate with other nations.

Spangler told reporters he had no doubt that the "basic thoughts" of several resolutions now pending before Congress would be used by the Advisory Council in drafting its statement. This would include the Ball-Burton-Hill-Hatch proposal of full-blown cooperation to establish an international police force.

He said the work of the group would be broken up into subcommittees which would continue in existence until the convention meets, working with experts furnished by the national committee. He mentioned labor, agriculture and finance as among the committees and said that the problems of converting industry to peacetime pursuits after the war would get special attention.

"Our greatest problem is going to be to put 25 million men back to work after the war ends," he declared.

Spangler took occasion to gain some comfort from the vote totals despite the election of a Democrat to succeed the late Representative Englebright (Republican) in the Second Congressional District of California. Spangler said that two Republican candidates running against the one Democrat on a ballot carrying no party designations polled 65 per cent of the total vote.

"That indicates the Republican trend is still on," he said.

Auditor for FWA Hangs Self; Death Of Woman Probed

Harold R. Williams, 50, of 609 22d st. nw., an auditor with the FWA, committed suicide yesterday by hanging himself from a closet door at his residence, as the result of despondency over separation from his family at Staten Island, N. Y., according to a report made by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald.

At the same time the coroner was investigating the death of Violet Adell Thorworth, 60, of 1320 Park rd. nw., as a result of a two-story jump or fall to an areaway in the rear of her home. She died in Garfield Hospital at 12:07 p. m.

Detective Sergt. Richard Felber said Williams left two notes.

Miss Thorworth leaves two sisters, the Misses Julia and Marian Thorworth.

Flier, Plane Bound for D. C. Lost Aug. 19

Col. Douglas B. Netherwood, 4936 Rodman st. nw., a pioneer in Army aviation with more than 29 years of flying service, has been missing since August 19 on a flight from Orlando, Fla., to Washington, the War Department announced yesterday.

Colonel Netherwood was returning to duty at the Engineers School, Fort Belvoir, Va., after an Army mission at the Air Forces School of Applied Tactics at Orlando. He was accompanied by Corpl. Kelly M. Cates of Fort Smith, Ark.

No Clew Found

The War Department said an intensive search has been under way since the plane's disappearance but no clew has been found. The mystery was heightened by the absence of any record of radio communication with the plane since Colonel Netherwood took off. The plane was equipped with radio and officials believed the accident may have occurred so unexpectedly that the pilot had no opportunity to send out a message.

His wife, Mrs. Harriet Netherwood, and daughter, Elizabeth, live at the Rodman street address. Three sons who are in the armed forces include First Lieut. Douglas B. Netherwood, jr., stationed at Birmingham, Ala.; Aviation Cadet Francis B. Netherwood, at San Marcus, Tex., and Pvt. William D. Netherwood, at Camp Spring, Md.

Native of England

A native of Birmingham, England, Colonel Netherwood was a graduate of Texas A. and M. College. He entered the Army in 1908 and three years later was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Coast Artillery. In 1914, he joined the aviation section of the Signal Corps.

Colonel Netherwood, who first served here in 1927 in the office of the chief of the Air Corps and for four years thereafter was chief of the finance section, was widely known in Washington. Stationed at Fort Belvoir since last October, he had previously served as commanding officer at Baer Field, Fort Wayne Ind., and Mitchel Field, N. Y., as wing commander in the Panama Canal Zone and as director of the Air Corps Board, Maxwell Field, Ala.

Police Recover Body Of Boy From River

Police late yesterday recovered the body of 15-year-old Robert McAuley, 1222 29th st. nw., from the Potomac River at 30th st. nw. after he had fallen from a barge while fishing.

The body was recovered by harbor police at 5:15 and he was pronounced dead by a physician from Emergency Hospital at 6:30.

Robert was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Johnston C. McAuley. His father is employed at the Naval Observatory.

Letdown In Standards

Congress took a long step toward meeting the Nation's obligation to the families of enlisted men when it provided, shortly before adjourning for its summer recess, a fund of $4,400,000 for the care of soldiers' and sailors' wives who are having babies. Heretofore some of these young mothers have had to appeal to welfare organizations for help in securing medical care and hospitalization at the time their infants are born. Now in States cooperating under this plan the wife of a serviceman may arrange for prenatal, delivery and postnatal care, with hospital and doctor bills paid by the State health department.

In one respect, however, the law is much inferior to most of our legislation requiring a matching of Federal and State funds for social welfare programs. An amendment forbids the Children's Bureau to set up standards of obstetrical practice in administration of the fund. Any practitioner permitted to serve in lieu of an obstetrician under State law may be paid from this fund. In some States this will mean that diploma-mill graduates utterly incompetent to handle a complicated case of childbirth will be put on a par with highly trained specialists in this sphere.

We find it difficult to believe that Congress added this amendment deliberately. The principle that Federal agencies should prescribe minimum standards to be met by the States when they take advantage of Federal grants of this sort is well established. There seems to be no reason for departure from that principle in this case. Yet Congress has departed from it, and the result may be a tragic letdown in the high standards of obstetrical service which this country has set up in recent years. Since the lives of mothers and children are at stake, we believe that Congress should reconsider this ill-advised amendment when it returns to Washington.

Wait And See

It would seem premature as yet to describe the invasion of the Calabrian subpeninsula as the definitive invasion of the European mainland. There is nothing as yet to show that it is more than a diversion intended to distract attention from the main thrust. This may come at some other and even more exposed point on the European mainland—possibly in the Balkans, possibly on the Mediterranean flank of France, possibly at several points simultaneously.

Thus far only the British Eighth Army has been mentioned in the communiques and dispatches as having participated in the invasion. If a full-dress invasion of the continent is really under way, it would be logical enough that the first great assault should be undertaken by Montgomery's army, which is probably the most efficient and formidable fighting unit now in existence. But it is equally logical that this army, now in control of Messina and northeastern Sicily, should control and occupy the opposite or Calabrian side of the straits, or even the whole of southern Italy as far north as Naples, or even Rome.

The Axis is said to have something like 40 divisions in Italy. An army of this strength is capable of offering a vigorous and prolonged resistance, but would naturally do so on ground of its own choosing. This might mean a general evacuation of Italy by the Germans as far as the Valley of the Po, accompanied, of course, by whatever delaying actions might be necessary to cover such a retreat. Is it likely, however, that in such an event Italy would formally remain in the war? Any Italian government would have the choice between capitulation and the abandonment of more than half of its territory, including the capital. By now the decision, one way or another, must have been made, and there can be not very much doubt that there is some definite connection between the invasion of southern Italy and the announcement that Enrico Galleazzi, governor-general of Vatican City, is now on his way in the Atlantic clipper from Lisbon to the United States.

It takes no great acumen to perceive that from every consideration of military logic the main attack on Europe's "fortress" must come at its weakest points. Thus it would certainly not take, as the more vociferous friends of Russia demand that it should, the form of a frontal attack against western France, nor would it necessarily take the form of forcing an attack on Germany proper through the Brenner Pass. There are other and possibly easier gateways to Berlin. To say all this, however, is not to deny that we have now arrived at a great historic moment. British troops are now back on the European mainland from which they were expelled so easily and with such humiliation in the spring of 1940. The psychological consequences of such an event cannot fail to be tremendous. But for the rest we must wait and see.

Treasury Quibble

The controversy between Secretary Morgenthau and the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation seems to be indicative of frayed nerves more than anything else. So far as we can determine there is no momentous issue at stake. Experts of the Joint Committee want to have ready access to information bearing upon the administration of various Federal tax laws. To obtain this information they wish to maintain close contacts with the Bureau of Internal Revenue staff which is actually administering the law. Apparently the Treasury does not object to providing the Joint Committee with data, providing that it flows through Secretary Morgenthau's office. But it objects to the sort of direct working relationship which the committee believes to be essential to give Congress a full understanding of certain tax problems.

Secretary Morgenthau has a point, of course, in insisting that the Bureau of Internal Revenue is responsible to him and not to a committee of Senators and Representatives. But the right of Congress to call upon executive agencies for information is equally indisputable. We do not know whether Colin F. Stam, the Joint Committee's chief of staff, was diplomatic in trying to establish direct contacts with a bureau in Secretary Morgenthau's department. But what point could there be, in any event, in denying the Joint Committee ready access to the data it seeks? Both the Treasury and the committee are interested in securing effective tax legislation. Surely it is in the public interest for the tax experts serving Congress to obtain a closer understanding of administrative experience under existing revenue acts.

It is the Treasury's job to submit programs for the raising of revenue to Congress. But the final responsibility for the enactment of legislation belongs to Congress. Obviously the two should be working together on any task as momentous as that of raising 12 billion dollars, to stave off inflation and help to finance the war. Beside that undertaking, the Treasury's quibble about releasing data directly through one of its bureaus seems very petty indeed. If the Treasury really supposes that its dignity can be upheld by standing upon such shallow formalities, it has a strange view of what comes first in the public mind these days. We suggest to Secretary Morgenthau that it is not the enemy that is knocking at the door of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, but a coordinate branch of the Federal Government which must enact the new tax program if we are to have one.

Smear Tactics

In its "investigation" of the Federal Communications Commission, the Cox Committee has now managed to dig down to a new level of meanness and banality. All of the charges it has made so far have been in the form of epithets. Considering the committee's record, no one need be in the least surprised that it has now stooped to an accusation that the FCC has engaged in draft dodging. This particular form of name-calling, though now somewhat hackneyed, is always good for a sneer. It deserves no more credence or consideration than the other "revelations" dredged up by the unsqueamish counsel for the committee, Eugene L. Garey.

The simple fact is that the FCC, like every other Government agency, submits its draft-deferment requests to a central review committee. It is governed by the rigorous standards for deferment of Federal personnel which the President laid down some months ago. Moreover, much of its work is of a highly technical nature, entailing skills which cannot easily be replaced. Nearly all of the employes whose deferment was sought by the Commission are engineers engaged in work connected with the Nation's vital communications facilities; if they were employed in comparable work in private industry, they would be deferred automatically. But the Cox Committee counsel chose to ignore these obvious facts. He went so far, indeed, as to refuse to permit a statement about them by an FCC representative to appear in the record.

Perhaps, when Congress reconvenes it will put a stop to this travesty on its investigative procedures. But the legislative branch of the Government has been encouraged in its apathy about the situation by the irresponsible indifference of the executive branch. The chairman of the Cox Committee has been publicly charged with having received a $2500 fee for representing a Georgia radio station in proceedings before the FCC. The charge involves an outright violation of Section 113 of the Criminal Code. Yet the Department of Justice has made no effort to indict Congressman Cox. The criminal division of the Department has recently been placed under the direction of Assistant Attorney General Tom C. Clark. A prompt probing of the Cox case should have a top priority in his order of business. He will be judged by the manner in which he meets this test.

Battering Ram

According to a Russian war bulletin, more than 35,000 German troops were killed and 5100 captured in the final liquidation of enemy forces that had been trapped west of Taganrog. These figures, even if due allowance is made for the possibility that they are exaggerated, suggest that the fighting on the southern sector of the Eastern Front has taken a very different course from that described by the Germans.

According to Berlin, the evacuation of Taganrog was a strategic withdrawal, carried out in orderly fashion with the German forces kept intact and moving without hindrance to a previously prepared position. The Russian claims tend to throw a good deal of cold water on this face-saving Nazi theory. What apparently happened was that the Germans tried desperately to hold Taganrog and for good reason, since the loss of Taganrog meant the loss of their southern anchor, without which they may not be able to remain in the Donets area at all. But the Russians attacked in great force and finally broke through. By that time, however, it was too late for the Germans to retreat rapidly enough to save the bulk of their army in the Taganrog region, a great many of whom were surrounded when the Russians succeeded in carrying out a wheeling movement that brought them to a point on the Sea of Azov considerably to the west of Taganrog. Under the circumstances it is a fair presumption that the Russian claims regarding German losses are not too wide of the mark.

In the meantime, the Russians are waging offensive war at other vital points on the thousand-mile front extending from Smolensk to the Sea of Azov. The Red army is reporting progress in the direction of Poltava, west of Kharkov, and have captured Yenya in the Smolensk sector. Fighting of great moment is now taking place. For if Smolensk should fall into Russian hands, even a retreat to the Dnieper would not be enough to save the German army, since the Russians would then be in a position to go around the Dnieper. Great as have been the "valiant and magnificent triumphs" of the Red army, to use Winston Churchill's words, those that are potentially in the offing may be greater still.

Tribute To Anonymity

The London Economist, England's foremost financial weekly, completed its hundredth year of existence this week. The mere fact that it has managed to survive the political and economic vicissitudes of a turbulent century is a tribute to the sterling qualities of that publication. Its editorial contributions are distinguished for their excellent and often brilliant literary quality, while the editorial content is patently the product of trained minds. So, whether one agrees with or dissents from the views expressed by the Economist they carry weight by reason of this combination of style and learning.

Although a few of our financial journals have attained great longevity, none of them has acquired prestige comparable to that of the Economist. The reason probably lies in large part in certain fundamental differences between Britons and Americans. The British value institutional continuity more than we do, and know better how to preserve its integrity. That does not mean that a financial publication attains the dignity of an institution by becoming a product of static thinking. The Economist itself provides the best possible refutation of that assumption; it is thoroughly dynamic. However, the preservation of institutional values does make it incumbent upon publishers and editors to live up to inherited standards and try to be worthy of their predecessors.

It is significant that the anniversary address of the present editor of the Economist lauded the policy of anonymity, calling it one of the keystones of the publication. Anonymity undeniably gives weight to editorial opinions associated with the name of an outstanding publication, because the writer is voicing opinions molded by the knowledge of what has been said before and what is likely to be said hereafter. Consequently, anonymity of the right sort enables an organ of public opinion to become a more powerful influence than one whose editorial opinions reflect the views of a single individual. Few Americans have that passion for anonymity or even tolerance of it that is essential to the creation and perpetuation of a typical institutional journal such as the Economist.

ADVICE TO THE HIGH GATES OF THE GARDEN OF EDEN

Stay locked, High Gates. Maintain your burnished guard,
Your pinioned sentry with the flaming blade.
Keep safe your treey town. Stay locked, stay barred.
Be Beauty's haven and last ambuscade.

Maintain in peace your citadel of flowers.
Together let the lamb and lion lie.
Safeguard your tremulous and leafy towers,
Your streets of shade, your lakes' inverted sky.

Oh, let no stir or rumor of this day,
No noise of war invade your verdant walls,
Lest your sweet city, too, shall be a prey—
A withered Eden where no apple falls.

Brazil's War Role

BRAZIL'S War Minister Dutra, who this week has been in Washington on the last leg of his visit to the United States, last Saturday officially confirmed that the reason why he came here was to work out with our Government plans for a Brazilian Expeditionary Force.

General Dutra also revealed what kind of an army Brazil wants to put in the field.

"My country will not be satisfied to send a mere token force," he told ranking officers at San Antonio, Tex. "Brazil is determined to fight with the United States and to face all the consequences of this war."

It has been an open secret for months that Brazil is training men for overseas fighting. Very shortly after the North African invasion cut off all danger that the Axis would attack Brazil from an African springboard, Brazil's leaders began to say their country wanted a part in the offensive overseas. In the spring of this year, top-flight officers were sent to Africa to work out ways and means with the British-American command.

Brazil's Manpower Reservoir

With 42 million people Brazil is the second largest manpower reservoir in the New World. She has almost as many people as the United Kingdom or Italy and more than France. They have had compulsory military training since 1912. At the outbreak of the Second World War, trained reserves were estimated at around half a million men.

The Vargas government in 1936 began to enlarge Brazil's regular army, which had for years numbered 50,000 men. At the same time, they set up numerous new technical schools for officers.

On the eve of Pearl Harbor, they had around 75,500 men under arms. The last official figure, given out in 1942, put the number at 112,000, with a goal of 250,000. Since Brazil declared war on August 22, 1942, her selective service has been expanding her forces as rapidly as she could get equipment and materiel.

The difficulty that faces Brazil in her admirable enthusiasm to get directly into the fight on a large scale arises first of all from the fact that the country is not industrially advanced enough to equip a large modern army.

In recent years Brazil has made strides toward industrial development and even war manufacturing. Since General Dutra became Minister of War in 1936, she has built a big new powder plant, and a number of factories to make rifles, small arms munitions, gun carriages, gas masks, light artillery, military truck bodies, fuselages for military training planes and other light equipment. She has stepped up her production of cotton cloth, canvas, tanned leather and woolens. All of this helps, but it is still very far indeed from being enough to equip her men for today's warfare.

Brazilian Transportation

Equipment for Brazil's overseas forces must come from us. With our own armies, Russia and Great Britain drawing on us for material, the question arises as to the practicality of shipping large quantities to Brazil for them to train with. Transportation from Brazil to battle fronts also poses serious problems.

How large Brazil's overseas force will be depends entirely on what United Nations' strategists believe the quickest and surest way to win the war. But all Americans will honor Brazil's eagerness to fight with us, even if we can't spare all the equipment they could use.

If Brazil should, in the end, manage to get only a small force into the actual fighting, she still will have played a memorable role as our ally in the Second World War.

The best known of her two great contributions is, of course, her role as supplier of strategic war materials. Brazil produces a long list of these, some of which cannot be found in any quantity elsewhere.

From the day we first began to arm, Brazil's aid in speeding up production of these materials has been magnificent. Whenever it has been necessary for the Vargas government to act to break some bottleneck holding things up, they have done so willingly.

The second great contribution already on the books is Brazil's cooperation in permitting us to build a string of big airports around the bulge. The existence of these bases was revealed in August 1941, but they had already been in use for some time then.

It was over this air highway that we rushed aid to the British when their backs were against the wall in North Africa. Hundreds of planes, millions of tons of supplies streamed over this route to enable them to hold until we could get to them the heavier equipment needed for counterattack.

Only today when we see how that holding operation led to our African victory and the turn of the war can we begin to set a value on what it meant to have Brazil's friendship when the war was going against us.

Invasion Of Italy

By Barnet Nover

Another Rung Up The Ladder

WITH THE INVASION of the Italian mainland, the Allies have moved another rung up the long and difficult ladder that extends from North Africa to Berlin.

In some respects, the move is distinctly anticlimactic. Clearly indicated by everything that has happened in the Mediterranean theater for some time it comes as no surprise. It amounts to a good deal less than the second front for which the Russians have long been clamoring. And it is overshadowed by the tremendous victories which the Red Army has been winning in the Ukraine.

Nonetheless, the Allied invasion of Italy has very considerable symbolic and practical importance.

FOR THE FIRST TIME since the fall of France and the evacuation of Narvik, more than three years ago, Allied troops are again on continental European soil.

Even more pointedly than before the Nazis are under notice that every foot of Europe's far-flung western and southern coasts is vulnerable to Allied attack. For what happened early Friday morning on the Calabrian toe of the Italian boot may happen sooner or later elsewhere—in Norway or the Low Countries, in France or the Balkans.

More than ever, therefore, and regardless of commitments elsewhere, the Germans are faced with the necessity of maintaining and even expanding their military forces in western Europe and in Italy and Yugoslavia and Greece and Bulgaria.

THE ALLIED invasion of Italy also opens up certain immediate and direct possibilities which must not be lost to sight.

In the first place, Italy has now become a battlefield. Any lingering hope which the Italian people and government may have had that Italy would be allowed to revert to the status of a neutral has been destroyed.

The Italians now have no alternative but to fight with the Germans to hold the Allies at bay or help the Allies get rid of the Germans in their midst. They cannot remain passive spectators of the struggle.

IN THE SECOND PLACE, the Allies are now in process of acquiring air bases from which the assault on German positions in the Po Valley can be carried with far greater force than has been possible hitherto.

It happens that the landings on Calabria were preceded and accompanied by raids on bridges and rail junctions south of the Brenner. But these raids involved great distances. In south Italy the Allies will have bases from which German concentrations in the north of the kingdom could be attacked more easily.

IN THE THIRD PLACE, the occupation of south Italy, which should not take too long, will bring the Allies very much closer to German-occupied areas in the Balkans than they've ever been before.

Very soon the Adriatic, which the Italians have regarded as an Italian lake, will be dominated for most of its extent by Allied air power. We shall be close enough to Yugoslavia to supply and reinforce the troops which Mikhailovitch has under his command and the guerilla bands which have been giving the Axis garrison a continuous headache.

The very fact that aid and succor may soon be on the way for the heroic Yugoslav forces which continued to fight on after their country had been overrun by the Nazis is certain to stir the Yugoslav people into a new ferment. The same will be true in Greece. And, in fact, the repercussions of the Allied invasion of Italy will be strongly felt throughout southern Europe.

BUT THAT INVASION is only one move of a number which the Allies may make before very long with the purpose of tightening the ring around the Reich.

There will be no letup in Allied bombing of German cities. The effect of that aerial campaign has already been considerable and will be greater and even more devastating as Allied air power increases in range and destructiveness.

And while the Italian invasion may fall considerably short of what the Russians want in the way of a second front the fact remains that any development which tends to disperse German forces works to the advantage of the Red army just as every victory won by the Red army makes the task of the British and American forces that much easier.

At the beginning of the fifth year of the war the Allies are everywhere on the march. There is still a very tough struggle ahead of us. The road to Berlin is long and hard. But from the east and the south the armies begin to converge as, before very long, they may begin converging from the north and the west as well.

Letters To The Editor

The Mimeograph

I wish I had a commission in J. Caesar's legions of old
Where the mimeograph as we know it was a story that hadn't been told,
Their orders then were mostly verbal, they were seldom called on to write,
For most of an officer's duties were training his men how to fight.

Then they fought with the sturdy Helvetians, a man who was absent was missed,
For they didn't have half of their soldiers detached and away on some list;
They carried their banners to England and the conquered had no cause to laugh,
But I'm told that it wasn't accomplished by the use of the mimeograph.

I sit in a big city office that's filled up with tables and chairs
And the mail man falls down exhausted when he's carried my letters upstairs,
He deposits his load in the corner and then he is through with his chore,
While I have ten hours before me reading the memos from Corps.

Now back in the days of J. Caesar when he fought from the Rhine to the Rhone
He had to get out Special Orders with a mallet and chisel and stone,
There were no carbon copies of that stuff to bother his Staff and the "Line",
And yet, so historians tell us, his soldiers just got along fine.

The Senate sent Caesar a letter, 'twas early one day in the Fall,
"Explain by indorsement hereon, Sir, the results of your campaign in Gaul,"
He chiseled a snappy indorsement, 'I came and I saw and I won,
Put that in your pipe and smoke it, you pin-whiskered sons-of-a-gun."

Were I to write such an indorsement and send it "through channels" to Corps,
The chances are one to a hundred, I'd not have to write any more,
They'd order a General Court-Martial, I'd be in Class "B" in a day,
And then they'd revoke my commission and stop all the rest of my pay.

Each day as I sit in my office, my shoulders get more of a stoop,
And I wish I had a commission in J. Caesar's Headquarters Troop,
And yet, I could die well contented, should this be my last epitaph,
"Here lies the American Soldier who abolished the mimeograph."

State Department

Our State Department is engaging in an anti-Soviet policy. Undeniably this is a factor for disunity and sows the seeds for continued inter-Allied dissension.

Our policy should be to clarify the issues disturbing the American people by emphasizing that—

1. Both the United States and Great Britain have reason to be happy that nominally peaceful relations exist between the U. S. S. R. and Japan because it would seriously impair Allied strength to have Russia divide her troops on two fronts.

2. That as a result of Russia's policy of noninvolvement with Japan, it is necessary for the Japanese to maintain a large, inactive army on the border of Siberia.

3. That many fathers would be in our Army today with no possibility of deferment if the Russian army were not successfully engaging over 200 German divisions (as compared with 7 divisions engaged by the Allies in North Africa, 3 divisions conquered in Sicily and an estimated 70 divisions left to defend the rest of Europe).

4. That this Russian state deserves our full cooperation in this war in which we are allies. To indulge in unfounded suspicions and propaganda is treason to our mutual cause. COLBY K. BROWN.

"Sinatramania"

When Frank Sinatra was singing with Tommy Dorsey's Orchestra he was a definite success. However, he was no sensation. Why is he now? Is he really all that good or is it just the result of very good publicity agents? In my opinion it is the latter.

Being an average type of girl, naturally I love good popular music. It would be crazy to say that Frank Sinatra is not good, because he is—but all this recent publicity is ridiculous. No singer is so good that people should swoon or go into hysterics when listening to him—there are places for such unfortunates. R. C.

The Once Over

Himmler, Man Of Charm

("Hitler assured the German people that Heinrich Himmler, newly named for important duties at home, is a kindly, sympathetic man."—news item.)

Do not worry, fellow Germans—
Don't feel frightened, sad or blue
As I name that gentle fellow
Heinrich Himmler over you!
Do not credit silly rumors
That he is a man of hate;
Oh, I really can't imagine
How such tales originate!

II

He is the kindliest of persons—
Ah, that gentle, placid face!
He's a tribute to the virtues
Of the superdooper race;
Treat all talk of ruthless tactics
As just simple liverwurst;
Himmler wouldn't harm a housefly—
(If the housefly saw him first!)

III

Gaze upon his face! How gentle:
There the sweetest feelings park;
He's a fellow well worth meeting—
(If the alley isn't dark):
Note those shining pince-nez glasses—
Get that calm and peaceful air—
Can't you see the love and kisses
That are so reflected there?

IV

Just the chief of the Gestapo—
This he is and nothing more;
He plays softly "Hearts and Flowers"
To drive out the trials of war;
He's my Good Will Delegation—
He's my little Fairy Prince—
He's Sir Galahad (in German)—
He's my Chief of Gentle Hints.

V

He's the Nazi Little David—
Ah, you'll love the man because
If he had a little weight on
He would look like Santa Claus;
He's our Little Goody Twoshoes
And the Little Eva type;
He is Germany's Nice Nellie
(With a loaded iron pipe)!

VI

He's the Boy Who's Kind to Birdies—
He feeds pigeons in the parks;
He's our own Big Brother Movement
And writes verses on the larks;
He helps ladies over crossings,
He gives kiddies' heads a pat;
When he rides in elevators
He will always lift his hat.

VII

Heinrich Himmler! How you'll love him!
In his presence each heart melts;
Bring your troubles to him freely
And do what he says . . . OR ELSE!
Rally round this knight so shining,
Never doubt his gentle touch;
And remember, fellow Germans,
Himmler will not hurt you . . . MUCH!

"Well, I'm back from Saratoga!" exclaimed Elmer Twitchell today at the Long Island Station in New York. The good old spa just beyond Jamaica! I enjoyed the change. I took the hot sulphur baths in the L. I. R. R. day coaches every day. I stuck to the mineral waters at Locust Valley, Hollis and Sunnyside, etc., and I'm a new man. It worked wonders on me. Thinking Important

Funny how many things humanity will do to substitute for thinking. They will do Red Cross work, give blood plasma, drive trucks, work long hours, submit to all kinds of hard drudgery, but if we are asked to think or to contribute our thoughts to a cause we close up like a clam.

Now we are asked (in this year 1943) to think about winning the peace. We are asked by members of our Foreign Relations Committee to let them hear from us. We are asked to send our thoughts to Washington prior to September 14.

If we will not vote and if we refuse to think for our country we will have to fight and die for her.

There are resolutions on peace which are facing Congress September 14, 1943.

What is your vote on them? Name five Americans whom you would trust to set up the peace plan. Send that list of five along.

Vote for your home town officials. Vote for your State leaders. Vote for President who will keep the peace by justice put into document and into practice here in America.

Do you refuse to think for your country?

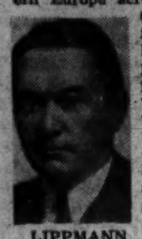
Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Second Front

MR. EARL BROWDER'S views on "the second front"—by which he means an invasion of northern Europe across the English Channel — are interesting only because he has put into bitterly provocative words a view which has had the support not only of many laymen, but of some professional soldiers and sailors. Indeed it is quite evident from a close reading of his speech that, while recklessly exploiting his knowledge to further his political views, he is by no means altogether uninformed about matters which have been earnestly debated for some 18 months.



LIPPMANN

MR. BROWDER says that "the failure to realize the second front even during the beginning of the third year of coalition ..... poses the alternative: either Britain and the United States are unwilling to carry any proportionate share of the fighting or they are unable to do so." This grave charge, which if believed would have such lamentable consequences, calls for an answer. There is an answer.

The answer is that in the first year of coalition war—the year 1942—we were quite unable to launch a successful frontal attack against the most strongly defended coast on the face of the globe. In this year—1943—we are not in the third year but only three-quarters of the way through the second year of the coalition war. The third year—which Mr. Browder talks about —will not begin until 1944.

THE REAL question is not whether we should have crossed the Channel this year but whether we should have spent the year concentrating all our forces in England instead of making the campaign in the Mediterranean. That was the actual choice: whether to attack this year where we had the required forces for attack, or to spend the year without fighting while we prepared for the cross-Channel invasion.

In other words, those who take the view which Mr. Browder expresses will have to argue that the whole Mediterranean campaign was a mistake. For they cannot have their cake and eat it too. They must be prepared to say that we have wasted our energy on the conquest of North Africa and of Sicily, the collapse of Italy, the neutralization of Spain, the opening of the Mediterranean, the establishment of a second air front against Germany, and the unsettlement of the Axis position in the Balkans. They must not slyly or unconsciously assume that we could have accomplished all these things and could also have crossed the Channel and engaged fifty to a hundred German divisions.

THERE WILL be those who say: where are we now that we are in Italy? The answer is that when we are in Italy we are in the center of Europe. There are many who do not know the geography of Europe. Fortunately Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt do know it. We shall have achieved that very thing which has been one of the principal sources of the German power: we shall be in the middle of all the theaters of war, able to strike in many different directions capable therefore of compelling the Germans to defend themselves on a long arc over a vast region where the peoples are on the verge of revolt and the German communications the worst.

Mr. Browder says that the architects of this campaign have a "complete ignorance of the nature of war." Ignorance indeed: to force your way into the heart of the Continent instead of inviting an indecisive battle at the outer defenses of the German position!

FAR FROM its being the product of complete ignorance of the nature of war, the Allied campaign is the first, and also a brilliantly productive, demonstration of war in its most modern form. For it is a campaign in which, as never before, all arms are combined and employed to their maximum advantage—the only great campaign in history where air power, sea power, mechanized land power, and political warfare, have been used in strategic combination.

Those who criticize this strategy are thinking not about this war but about the last war—about a war of only two dimensions on the ground in which sea and air power are subordinated to the infantry. And they are asking Britain and America, which are primarily sea and air powers, to disregard their special advantages and to fight the kind of war which Germany, primarily a land power, is most eager to have them fight.

WHAT IS the object of this "triphibian" war, as Mr. Churchill calls it? It is to stretch, confuse, and divide the German forces over such a vast area that they can never be concentrated adequately anywhere. Thus the air assault from England has stretched thin German air power in Russia; an air assault from Italy will subdivide the German defenses now aligned against the English attack. If this is not war, what is war?

This is war fought with intelligence, and not only with materials and men's bodies. It is a war which, like the preparatory attacks on the bull in the bull ring, reduce him to a point where the toreador can move in for the kill. The "second front" is the kill, and all of us—including the Russians—may thank our lucky stars that it is reserved for that end. For if it were used earlier, and failed, what would we then use for the kill?

WE MUST have done, I believe, with the idea that we have to hang our heads in shame because we are fighting the kind of war we are best suited to fight. There is nothing embarrassing and nothing to apologize for. In fact there is every ground and reason for pride, and we shall get on with the war better, and also with the Russians, if we assert our right to believe in the great enterprise which we are carrying out.

We shall deal best with the Russians as allies, as self-respecting powers, and not as cringing apologists for a military effort which requires no apologizing. When we deal with the Russians, let us respect our military power but then let us assess it realistically—adjusting our political views to its real magnitude and to its corresponding limitations.

Field Party Bully Idea

One For The Book

By Dale Harrison
Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

In the midst of war and taxes, it is nice to know that the Government still has time to be solicitous of a citizen's safety when he is on a field party, whatever that it, and may encounter a bull.

The Geological Survey Bureau has issued a pamphlet, and what it amounts to, in essence, is an official documentation of that famous pasture proverb: "Beware the bull."

The pamphlet aims to serve as a guide to folks going on a field party. Probably you are not contemplating a field party in the immediate future, but don't be too sure, as life is constantly jumping the track and almost any minute some moron is apt to cry: "Let's go on a field party," and there you are.

Take a Look Around

The pamphlet says the first thing to do on a field party is to look around and make sure no bull is present, or even in the vicinage. If one happens to be about, the pamphlet says, the first thing to do is to get the beast locked up.

It does not say how to go about this, and the implication is pretty pointed that if you do not know how to lock up a bull you'll be smart to go home and forget the whole business.

The thought the Government seeks to get over is contained in the sentence: "Remember, bulls are dangerous animals," the point also is made that it is foolhardy to run from a bull, as bulls make good time, once they put their heads down; and fleet, indeed, is he who can outdistance same.

It's a Dog's Life

The pamphlet next warns the field party to beware of dogs. Dogs, it urges, also should be locked up. One can quickly realize that a field party might spend so much time locking up bulls and dogs that the party would never get going, a contingency concerning which the pamphlet is strangely silent.

If a dog happens to pop up unexpectedly in the midst of the party, your Government says flatly: Do not run—stand your ground. Now if the dog, too, should stand his ground, the two of you might remain thus vis-a-vis over a considerable period of time, culminating, conceivably, in death by starvation to you both.

The Government, however, has foreseen such an exigency, and advises you to "back away slowly." This apparently is calculated to fool the dog, which will think you are still within chewing distance until it realizes, too late, that you are home and abed. What his emotions then will be, one can imagine.

August Costs Show Decline, OPA Insists

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

A general decline in the cost of living in August of .8 of 1 per cent is expected to show up when the Government's complete figures are issued, according to Chester Bowles, deputy price administrator.

Bowles, in a letter to Chairman Sabath (Democrat) of Illinois declared that measures already in operation are expected to "eliminate well over half the rise in the cost of living which took place between September 15, 1942, and May, 1943."

'42 Levels Approached

"The food program, the details of which are being worked out, will, we believe, complete the job and restore the cost of living to the September, 1942, level," Bowles added. "Once that objective has been accomplished, our policy will be to maintain the cost of living at that level for the duration."

Bowles' letter was a reply to Sabath's protest in mid-August that prices of fruits and vegetables "are not only outrageous, but criminal."

Rollbacks Cited

Sabath declared that "we should not continue to be softies any longer and should cease to accede to the demands of the so-called agricultural leaders to increase prices which are now absolutely unjustified."

In replying, Bowles pointed out Congress had restricted the power to fix ceilings on the farmer's prices, but cited recent rollbacks in the price of cabbage and lettuce, as suggesting what could be done by dealing with distributors' margins. Price reductions for the two commodities, he said, were made without affecting the farm price, and brought the margins back to "reasonable though not ungenerous" levels.

In predicting August would show a .8 of 1 per cent cost of living decline, Bowles said "the greater degree of compliance which must result under the community dollars-and-cents price program will reduce the cost of living at least another 1 per cent and possibly as much as 2 per cent beyond this."

War Agencies Held Unhampered To State Courts

Akron, Ohio, Sept. 3 (AP).—The Ninth District Court of Appeals held today that State courts have no jurisdiction over Federal agencies created by wartime conditions.

The decision was given by the three-judge court in reviewing an appeal by the city of Akron from dismissal in Common Pleas Court of an injunction suit seeking to restrain the Akron Transportation Co. from carrying out Office of Defense Transportation orders to reduce service on 10 city bus routes.

The ruling upheld an earlier decision by Common Pleas Judge Ray B. Watters. Presiding Judge Perry H. Stevens said the appellate court unanimously agreed that State courts have no jurisdiction "in attacking the validity of decrees issued by the Office of Defense Transportation."

Wages Increase 31% In First Seven Months

Americans received $56,761,000,000 in wages and salaries during the first seven months of this year, Commerce Secretary Jones reported last night. This is 31 per cent higher than the amount earned in the same period last year and 87 per cent above earnings in the corresponding period of 1929.

CHAPTER XXX

Moscow Dateline

By Henry C. Cassidy

A Toast to American Friendship!

We have seen the Russia of the war. What will be the Russia of the peace? Reporting, not prophesying, is my business, but it takes no special gift of foresight to see that Russia, victorious, will be after the war what she was before—Soviet.

To Joseph Stalin, his associates, the Red army, and the Russian people, after a quarter-century of Soviet rule, there is no question, at least consciously, of any other outcome.

HENRY C. CASSIDY

Stalin said, November 6, 1941, "There must be no interference whatever in the internal affairs of other nations!" On November 6, 1942, he proclaimed, among the aims of the Allies, "the right of every nation to manage its affairs in its own way." To him, there is no doubt but that Russia, left without interference to live its own life, will live it the Soviet way. What kind of Russia does this mean?

Here the prophet treads on the thinnest of ice. Anyone who recalls Russia's 1939 accord with Germany, and then her resistance to German invasion, realizes that she is capable of the most abrupt about-face, of the most amazing miracle.

Yet, on the basis of her present record, I should say victorious postwar Soviet Russia would be socialistic, but not internationally revolutionary; atheistic, but not violently antireligious; autocratic but not antidemocratic.

Basis of Socialism

To the Russians, in this case also, there is no question of any other general definition for their regime. Take the first point, socialism. The 1936 constitution provides, in article 1, "The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is a socialistic state of workers and peasants"; and in article 4, "The economic foundation of the USSR consists in the socialist system of economy and socialist ownership of the implements and means of production, firmly established as a result of the liquidation of the capitalist system of economy, the abolition of private ownership of the implements and means of production, and the abolition of exploitation of man by man."

At no time throughout the war has there been any fundamental change in that constitution or any compromise with private property.

Stalin, outlining the period after the first World War and the Russian civil war, said, February 23, 1942: "During those two decades of peaceful construction, there sprang up in our country socialist industry and collective farming; science and culture flourished and the bonds of friendship between the people of our country strengthened." Certainly, he foresees further development of the same kind of socialist industry and collective farming after the second World War.

Policy Isolated

The old bugaboo of world revolution, however, had been killed by Stalin himself, long before the war, in his statements that communism was not an export product. If it needed to be buried any deeper, he did that during the war itself by his repeated statement; of the policy of noninterference in the domestic affairs of other nations—a policy that applied as much to Soviet dealings with other powers as it did to their relations with the Soviet Union. In other words, Russia, once revolutionary, took its hands off other countries and now it has abolished the Communist Internationale.

The case for religion seems clear on the record. The Soviet constitution provides, in article 124: "Freedom to perform religious rites and freedom of antireligious propaganda is recognized for all citizens." But what is more important in this case is: Which does the Communist Party promote, religious or antireligious propaganda? The answer is that it favors the latter, that it still holds religion to be the opium of the people, and that Russia, as long as the Communist Party is supreme, will be predominantly atheistic. But those who still wish to practice religion will not be persecuted.

The case for autocracy is less clear, being obscured by a vocabulary of words that do not always mean the same thing to all men. By autocracy, I mean independent, absolute rule by a man responsible only to himself; and by democracy, government by the people exercising supreme power through representation.

Stalin and Democracy

Stalin, in his November 6, 1942, summary of Allied aims, mentioned "restoration of democratic liberties." His constitution was modeled after democracy in its purest form. It provides, in article 30, "The supreme organ of state power of the U. S. S. R. is the supreme council of the U. S. S. R.," which should exercise exclusive legislative power and oversee the actions of the executive body, the council of people's commissars. The deputies to the Supreme Soviet, by article 134, "are elected by the electors on the basis of universal, equal, and direct suffrage by secret ballot." That is democracy.

There is a catch in the constitution, however, in article 126, granting citizens the right of forming public organizations, "and for the most active and politically conscious citizens from the ranks of the working class and other strata of the toilers, of uniting in the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks), which is the vanguard of the toilers in their struggle to strengthen and develop the socialist system and which represents the leading nucleus of all organizations of the toilers, both public and state." In other words, above all the democratic system is placed a comparatively small body of men (about 3,000,000 out of the total prewar population of 193,000,000), whose power is unlimited. Their leader is Stalin. That is autocracy.

To say that postwar Russia will be socialistic, atheistic, and autocratic, does not mean that she will be static. Out of so tremendous a struggle, some change must come. No nation underwent a greater upheaval than Russia after the first World War. But then she was a defeated, dissatisfied power, her structure shattered. After this war she should be victorious and satisfied, her structure stronger than ever. In anticipation of that, one great change may already be foreseen—a more benevolent regime.

Purges Have Ended

This regime has started to grow mellow with age after 25 years of existence. It has been well satisfied with its servants on the front and in the rear during two years of war. It is showing its benevolence in many ways, some small, almost intangible, but all significant. The days of purges, for example, have ended.

With this kind of postwar Russia will it be possible to cooperate? The answer is that it may be difficult, but it can—and must—be done, if the Allies are to win the peace as well as the war.

In the field of immediate postwar problems, no insurmountable differences are to be foreseen. Russia, in fact, as the nation which has suffered most and fought best, has been surprisingly mild in its advance demands, much milder than some of the governments-in-exile of smaller states, which fought for a few days, then fled abroad to demand the dismemberment of Germany.

Equality a Principle

Summarizing on November 6, 1942, what he considers "the program of action of the Anglo-Soviet-American coalition," Stalin listed "abolition of racial exclusiveness; equality of nations and integrity of their territories; liberation of the enslaved nations and the restoration of their sovereign rights; the right of every nation to manage its affairs in its own way; economic aid to nations that have suffered and assistance in establishing their material welfare; restoration of democratic liberties; destruction of the Hitler regime." None of those principles should cause any trouble around the conference table.

On both sides there must be a desire for confidence and the understanding and there can be. I am reminded of the story of the officers of the United States supply mission who put up a Christmas tree in their quarters, the former home of the German military attache on Khlebny Pereoulok, and invited in 22 of the neighborhood children. One of them was eight-year-old Valodia, whose father was away at the front. Valodia, being Russian, accepted a glass of wine, but to drink it he had first to propose a toast.

Climbing up on a chair, he stood, raised his glass and said: "To Soviet-American friendship."

His own people and the American people owe it to Valodia, and to his father, to perpetuate that toast.

The Gallup Poll . . .

By George Gallup
Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 3.—When President Roosevelt, speaking at the conclusion of the Quebec conferences, reemphasized "unconditional surrender," he had the overwhelming majority of the American people behind him.

Although claims are often made that some American leaders harbor appeasement sentiment, this charge is not one that can be held against the people of this country.

Since the first dark days immediately after Pearl Harbor, the Institute has kept a careful check on peace sentiment throughout the Nation, and the percentage of people who would look with favor upon any kind of peace deal with Hitler on the basis of accepting the status quo has never been more than 10 per cent of the voting population.

Moreover, the number of people who would be willing to talk peace on a status quo basis, even if Hitler were ousted and the German generals took over, has declined from 13 per cent to 10 per cent during the last year.

Following are the results of the present survey—as compared to earlier findings—on this question:

"If Hitler offered peace now to all countries on the basis of not going any farther, but of leaving matters as they are now, would you favor or oppose such a peace?"

	Favor	Oppose	Undecided
Dec., 1941....	10%	86%	4%
Feb., 1942....	8	87	5
Feb., 1943....	4	92	4
TODAY	8	89	3

More than eight in every 10 would also oppose a compromise peace with German military leaders, even though Hitler were removed from power.

This is revealed by results to the following question:

"If the German military leaders removed Hitler from office and offered peace to all countries on the basis of not going farther, but of leaving matters as they are now, would you favor or oppose such a peace?"

The results:

	Favor	Oppose	Undecided
July, 1942....	13%	81%	6%
TODAY	10	84	6

The present survey reveals further that what little appeasement sentiment there is confines itself largely to voters of the lower educational level—those who had no opportunity to go beyond grade school.

On the question of making peace with the German leaders, this group shows a favorable vote of 14 per cent, as compared to a 5 per cent favorable vote among those who attended high school or college.

Maisky Agrees With Eden, Winant On 3-Way Parley

London, Sept. 3 (AP).—Ivan Maisky, former Soviet Ambassador to Great Britain and now vice commissar of foreign affairs, has agreed with Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and United States Ambassador John G. Winant that it would be a good idea to hold a three-power conference on a foreign-minister level, it was disclosed today.

So far, however, neither the place nor the date for such a parley as was suggested by Prime Minister Churchill in Quebec earlier this week has been agreed upon.

Spadework for the big three session was slowed down temporarily today by the illness of Maisky, who was described as indisposed and not seriously ill.

Philadelphia Chosen For CIO Convention

The Congress of Industrial Organizations has selected Philadelphia for its annual convention, opening November 1. Plans to meet at St. Louis were changed recently by executive officers. Sessions will be held at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel.

Row On Food Policy

And Le Cron Resigns Post

With a double-barreled blast aimed partly at the State Department and partly at Nelson A. Rockefeller, James D. LeCron yesterday made public his resignation as director of the food supply division of the Office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs.

He charged State Department officials with "interference, obstruction, delay and unintelligent dictation" and Rockefeller with voluntarily surrendering to the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations of the Department of Agriculture "control of your own program of food production in Latin America."

LeCron, who came to Washington with Henry A. Wallace in 1933 and is a close personal friend of the Vice President, declared in a letter written to Rockefeller and released to the press that even minor State Department officials had been able to block his work.

Obstacles Multiplying

Obstacles placed in his way have multiplied since the United Nations Food Conference at Hot Springs, he said, "instead of diminishing."

"These officials have recently forbidden us to discuss possible operations or to offer our services to the governments of several countries where increased food production is greatly needed—notably Bolivia and Ecuador—although budgets for operations in those countries were approved by Congress.

"They now have undertaken to tell us how many and what sort of agricultural experts we may send to countries with which we have agreements and hence obligations, without having the slightest idea what personnel is needed to carry out the terms of these agreements," he wrote.

Food programs in Paraguay and Nicaragua have been unnecessarily delayed, LeCron declared, "and we have been forbidden to send some of the agricultural technicians needed to fulfill the agreement" with the latter country.

Officer's Function

The OFAR in the Department of Agriculture, to which LeCron referred, works very closely with the State Department and in reality formulates most of the policy of its agricultural attaches in foreign countries. This office has consistently "forged ahead" since its formation 10 years ago and has been the official agency representing this country on the combined food board and in international food conferences.

It takes the "long-range viewpoint" in agricultural planning and is known to have entered its objection to plans "thought out under the stress of an emergency, if those plans collided with the long-range view." Its officials believe the best way to develop food production in any country is to "offer a guaranteed market" for the production. They have insisted new crops cannot be introduced "overnight with any expectation of increasing the food supply of the world quickly," but that the increases could come quickest in those crops a country already is accustomed to growing.

OPA Prohibits Its Workers From All Political Activity

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Staff Writer

OPA General Manager Chester Bowles declared emphatically yesterday all employes of the price agency will be forbidden to take part in any political activity during the forthcoming months under penalty of immediate dismissal.

The statement of policy followed a query whether OPA still adhered to an administrative order issued July 14, 1942, forbidding both paid and volunteer employes to participate in politics.

Albany Upheld

Bowles thereby upheld L. W. Herzog, district OPA director in Albany, N. Y., who notified members of his 16 local rationing boards they would have to resign if they ran for office.

Within the past weeks, however, reports were OPA would be forced to modify the stand taken on political activity by volunteer workers because of the serious manpower shortage already troubling the agency, particularly since many local ration board members also were active in community affairs.

Salaried OPA employes throughout the country must refrain from political activity under the Hatch Act which makes it illegal for Government workers to take part in political campaigns.

Hatch Act Cited

While OPA's administrative order stresses the effect of the act on the price agency's employes, it also specifically states "any person (including volunteers) who engages in any political activities within the spirit of the Hatch Act, even though the act may not be applicable, will be subject to prompt dismissal."

When the ration boards were originally established, members were selected by State governors whose selection sometimes leaned toward friends within the party, who consequently could be near the public at all times.

Since then, however, the complexion of the boards has changed with the selection placed up to local defense councils whose policy has been to seek out representative members of the community for service on the ration boards.

5% Newsprint Reduction Urged

Apparently resigned to a new cut in newsprint usage on October 1, the newspaper industry advisory committee has recommended a 5 per cent reduction in newsprint supplies.

At the same time the committee recommended to the War Production Board a tightening of controls over the granting of additional newsprint to newspapers which appeal for extra tonnage on a hardship plea.

Neither recommendation has been acted upon by the WPB. WPB declared that the exact percentage of the new fourth-quarter cut cannot be determined until the combined Resources and Production Board meets in the near future to learn the maximum tonnage that Canada can deliver during the fourth quarter. Canada has been delivering 210,100 tons of newsprint a month since January 1, approximately three fourths of the entire United States supply.

Local Clerics Suggested for Episcopal Post

By Robert Tate Allan
The Post Church Editor

Names of prominent local and nearby Episcopal clerics are among those having been submitted to the nominating committee for a new Bishop of Washington, it was rumored in religious circles last night.

Washington diocesan laymen and clergy have suggested, among others, the names of the Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Church, Navy Yard parish; the Rev. Edward Welles, rector of Christ Church, Alexandria, Va., where George Washington worshiped; Dr. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of Epiphany Episcopal Church in downtown Washington, and Lieut. Leslie L. Glenn, rector of St. John's Church, Lafayette Square, now on leave as Navy chaplain. Submission of names does not constitute a voting procedure, and all names must reach the nominating committee, Diocesan House, 1702 Rhode Island ave. nw., by midnight tonight.

Out-of-town suggestions submitted, it is understood, are Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of Lenox, Mass., formerly of the Washington Cathedral; the Right Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, now presiding bishop; W. Avery Mason of the National Episcopal Council; Donald B. Aldrich, now a Navy chaplain on leave from Ascension Church, New York City, and the Rev. Henry Darlington, rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York City, and Dr. Norman Nash, headmaster of St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H.

The nominating committee will select several names to present to the diocesan standing committee when the special diocesan convention meets after the general convention of the Episcopal Church in Cleveland in October.

Several members have been added to the nominating committee this week. They are Dr. Franklin J. Bohanan, chairman of the diocesan standing committee, and former rector of St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek Parish; Harrison Fiddesof, David E. Finley, Maj. William W. Naramore and Mrs. Robert Wallace McClanahan.

Waitress Known by Delegates To Conferences Will Be Bride

Served 30,000 Meals At Western Maryland College Dining Room

Miss Katherine Little, 19, popular waitress among religious conference delegates at Western Maryland College, Westminster, for six summers, will say "I do" October 20.

Katherine, who estimates to have served more than 30,000 meals in the campus dining room, will become the bride of Marvin Evans, 22, who will get his wings as second lieutenant in the Army Air Corps October 16, four days before the wedding.

The prospective bride is the daughter of Professor and Mrs. Lawrence Little. Her father has been professor of religion at Western Maryland College sinc 1930. The couple will be married wherever the groom is stationed October 20.

Katherine, who is a sophomore at Western Maryland, and began working in her spare time in the dining room when a sophomore at Westminster High School. An attractive blonde, she has two sisters who also wait on tables. They are Marjorie, 18, and Betty, 16.

The prospective bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Evans, sr., of Merchantville, N. J. He was graduated from Western Maryland College last June and is now stationed at Miami Beach, Fla.

Parley Opens Today

Principal speaker at this year's twenty-second conference of the District of Columbia Organized Bible Class Association on Western Maryland's campus will be Dr. Allen E. Claxton, pastor of New York City's Broadway Temple Methodist Church. His general theme will be "Building Spiritual Morale."

Katherine Little

More than 300 delegates from the District of Columbia, Maryland and other States are expected to attend the parley, today through Monday. One of the features will be a discussion on "Up-to-Date Plans for Up-to-Date People," to morrow at 10:15 a. m., with George E. Harris, Bible Association executive secretary, as discussion leader.

3 Mentioned For Methodist Bishopric Here

Most likely candidates for the position of new Methodist resident bishop of Washington are Bishops G. Bromley Oxnam of the Boston area; Ralph S. Cushman, St. Paul (Minn.) area, and Charles W. Flint, Syracuse (N. Y.) area, it was learned last night.

The position as successor to the late Bishop Adna Wright Leonard must be filled at the next northeastern jurisdictional conference in June, 1944, following the Methodist General Conference in Kansas City in April.

While the discipline of the now-united Methodist Church stipulates that bishops must be elected from candidates within jurisdictions, there is a possibility that Bishop Cushman may be permitted to leave his jurisdiction for this area, if elected, in the opinion of one prominent Methodist churchman here.

Bishop Oxnam, a liberal, is one of the best-known Methodist educators in America. He is a member of the Federal Council of Churches' Commission to Study the Bases of a Just and Durable Peace, and on the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains.

Bishop Cushman is president of the Anti-Saloon League of America, and best-known for his evangelistic endeavors.

American U. Religious Plan Is Announced

A chapel-centered religious program for the College of Arts and Sciences of the American University was announced yesterday by Dean A. B. Potorf, Miss Marian Bundy of Saranac Lake, N. Y., president of the Student Christian Fellowship, has been in Washington this week arranging plans for the program of her division.

The chapel program will begin with the matriculation address by Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes morning, September 22. The hour chapel services will then be held each Thursday at 11:15 a. m. with the public invited to attend. The chapel choir will sing at each service under the direction of Assistant Professor James B. McLain.

The Greek letter societies, as a result of a retreat held at the home of President Douglass, have taken as their project of the year the making of the thousands of WAVES on and adjacent to the college campus at home in the college community. Programs of a religious nature, competitive athletics, study groups, and Sunday night gatherings at the president's home are being arranged.

In announcing his program for the autumn, Dean Potorf said that the importance of making religious aspirations a fundamental activity in the formation of life values is an objective which makes the extra-curricular religious activities of great importance.

Dr. Harry W. Burgan, chairman of the board of trustees, said that the appointment of Prof. Potorf as dean of religion of the university was another step in the effort of the board to make the mind and soul partners in responsible living.

Dr. Pugh Takes Message to Chaplains

"The servicemen in this war are far superior to their fathers in the First World War," Dr. William Barrow Pugh, who is now overseas on a tour of war theaters, told a group of friends in New York City just before he took a plane for Europe.

"They are more intelligent, they are better balanced. They think more. Right now they are watching their chaplains closely. And after the war, when those chaplains who have shared their difficulties and sufferings overseas return as their own pastors in their home towns, they will listen to these former comrades of theirs with immensely keener interest and prompter response."

Dr. Pugh made it clear that he was going abroad as a messenger between the boy at the front and his family pew back home. But also, he indicated, he felt acutely his responsibility as an ambassador from the Protestant churches to the chaplains themselves.

"When I was a chaplain in France in the other war," he said, "never did I get a message from my church. Never once. I am determined that this connot be said of the church in the present war. Wherever I go I'll have only one thought. I go not as an individual, not as a minister of a particular church, but as a minister of the whole Church of Jesus Christ in America. For it is the heart of America, the heart of all of America, that is today with its boys overseas."

The American churchman has been in Great Britain since August 21 visiting camps and Army chapels, conferring with chaplains and other officers, and making public addresses. Dr. Pugh is the chairman of the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains and executive head of the Presbyterian Church in the USA.

"JESUS LOVES ME"
ANNA B. WARNER
Jesus loves me! this I know,
For the Bible tells me so:
Little ones to Him belong,
They are weak, but He is strong.
Yes, Jesus loves me,
Yes, Jesus loves me,
Yes, Jesus loves me,
The Bible tells me so.

Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS
For more than half a century children all over the world, even to the interior mountains of China, have loved this hymn, and today missionaries teach it to converts wherever they go. It was written by Anna B. Warner who wrote many bible stories, but would be remembered for this if she had written nothing else.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

New York, Sept. 3.—Up at Bear Mountain, N. Y., Tuffy Leemans has come down with the itch—to play some more football with the New York Giants, and that possibility is not at all remote, says Mr. Tim Mara, who owns the club.

POVICH

Leemans is supposed to be the backfield coach of the Giants this season, with his playing career behind him, but his coaching, says Mara, has thus far consisted chiefly of Leemans grabbing the ball and telling his pupils to "Follow me." Says Mara, "That Tuffy can't keep his hands off that ball. I wouldn't be surprised if he coaches himself right back into our backfield."

The assumption was that when Leemans rejoined the Giants as a member of Steve Owen's coaching staff that he was done toting any more footballs. He could have a job without playing, Mara assured him. Leemans still suffers from a slight deafness incurred two years ago on the football field and the Giants' owner does not care to have Tuffy risk any further injury, but Leemans doesn't scare easily.

One of the reasons that Leemans wants to play at least one more year for the Giants is because he thinks they can win the Eastern Division title, at least, this season. Up in the Giants' camp, they don't see why they aren't a better team than the Redskins, a belief that was lately voiced, incidentally, by George Strickler, the National Football League's public relations man, who gets around and gives close inspection to what goes on in the league.

Strickler says rather flatly that the Giants are the team to fear in the Eastern Division, not the Redskins. He was not at all impressed by the Redskins' performance in the Chicago All-Star game and makes full allowance for the fact that they were up against competition that was tremendous. "I like the Giants in the East," says Strickler, "and maybe Brooklyn is the second best club in the East."

The man the Giants need is a center. A fellow by the name of Mel Hein, who was the best center in the league for 10 years, has retired, and stout Steve Owen would part with an arm in exchange for a reasonable facsimile of Hein. Otherwise from end to end, Owen has a line that pleases him very much. He makes no violent disagreement when it is suggested that his Giants rate as a better ball team than the Redskins.

If the Giants are lacking a center, as they do, then they are no worse off than the Green Bay Packers who lost Charley Brock. There may not be a well rounded club in the league, incidentally. The Bears are hard hit in the line, and Bronko Nagurski's return to the team as a tackle may not be the answer. Strickler was telling our confrere Al Buck, of the New York Post, that the former wrestlers have it tough trying to come back to football! "Remember Jim McMillan," he points. "He was no help to the Bears after his years on the wrestling circuit."

Mara doesn't need the money, and the finances of the Giants have never been one of his great concerns, but this is a year when his football team could show its greatest profit in history. It will be one of the two remaining football teams operating in New York, with every college except Columbia having dropped football for the duration. The pros are in a great spot to win all of the football patrons among New York's seven million.

To the suggestion that the virtual abandonment of college football is a great break for the pros, Mara dissents, however, "I don't see it that way," he says. "College football helped make football fans more than the pros, perhaps. The colleges made the people football-minded, and the pros cashed in on that interest. Our game has grown to the point where college football was not in conflict with pro football. Anything that made the people football conscious was a help to our game."

Joe McCarthy was angry at one of his Yankee ballplayers today. He doesn't know which one, however. He knows only that the fellow has a strong throwing arm. The Yankee manager was sitting on the bench during fielding practice today when a throw came whizzing in from the outfield and struck him in the eye.

McCarthy was more angry than hurt. "Who threw that ball?" he demanded.

But the culprit had friends on the Yankee squad. "I dunno" was the answer, one by one. They were protecting the fellow, at least until McCarthy's mood mellowed a bit.

The first signs of a shiner were beginning to blossom around McCarthy's right eye when he finally broke the tension with "Well, whoever it was, I hope he can throw the ball just as hard when there are runners on base. That's the time when that dope probably will lob it like a beanbag."

Bud Metheny Hits Triple And Homer

Yankees Up Lead By Beating Wynn; Second Base Peak Of Nats' Attack

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

New York, Sept. 3.—Dealing rather contemptuously with any ideas the Nats had of getting back into the pennant race, the Yankees shut 'em out today, 4 to 0, and stepped 11 full games into the league lead. It was very dull, for the Nats.

Hank Borowy held Washington to five hits, and the only time the Nats' saw third base was during infield practice. Thereafter it was forbidden territory.

Two Yankee rookies, Bud Metheny and Bill Johnson, ganged up on Early Wynn. That pair wrenched all of the Yankees' runs out of Wynn. Betheny hit a three-bagger and a home run, and Johnson drove three runs across the plate with his pair of singles.

Yanks Collect Eight Hits

Wynn, and Mickey Haefner, who pitched the last inning, gave up eight hits, but they were toiling in a lost cause from the outset, what with the Nats unable to stir up a run. The Nats, in fact, didn't get a man on base until one was out in the fourth when Mickey Vernon sliced a double into left field.

Borowy scattered the five hits he allowed over five different innings. Three were doubles, but he didn't permit a hit of any description when a Washington athlete was in scoring position.

Metheny began to cause trouble in the very first inning when, with one out, he lined a three-bagger between Spence and Powell. Johnson scored him right away with a single to center and the Yankees had a 1-0 lead, and the ball game, as it developed.

The next time Metheny got to the plate, he improved on that three-bagger. He did it with a home run with one out in the third inning. The ball was eventually caught by a soldier sitting high in the right-field seats.

Wynn found himself in another situation in the fifth after he walked Borowy and threw a single to Weatherly with none out. Metheny could create no great damage in this spot, because he was delegated to sacrifice the runners to second and third, which he did. But the pesky Johnson, after looking very futile on his first two swings, slapped a single into left field and two more Yankee runs were home.

Never in Ball Game

The Nats never were in the ball game to any great extent. After Vernon got on base in the fourth with one out, following his double, Powell and Spence obliged Borowy by popping up. Priddy singled with one out in the fifth, and neither Myatt nor Robertson could get a ball out of the infield. Spence doubled with one out in the sixth, and Early flied out and Priddy took a third strike. Roberts singled with one out in the eighth, but Pinch-hitter Gene Moore fanned and Case flied out.

In the ninth Jack Powell doubled to left with one out, but Spence popped up and after Early walked, Priddy flied out, sending the 5399 customers home from the Yankees' little victory garden.

Johnny Niggeling will pitch against the Yankees tomorrow . . . The Nats will be facing merely Spud Chandler, who has won 17 and lost only 3 this season . . . However, the Nats are one of the three teams to beat him . . . Rookie Charlie Roberts reacted a bit shakily in his first big league game, but made no mistakes and singled solidly in the eighth for one of the Nats' few hits . . . Bob Johnson is still weak from his recent illness and doubtless won't play in the stadium games.

Sinkwich Will Get Release by Marines

Grid Lions, Who Drafted Ex-Georgia Star, Jubilant, but Worried About His Weight

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Sept. 3.—The toothless Detroit Lions of the National Football League, who hadn't had any recent good news, learned today along with the rest of the gridiron world that Frankie Sinkwich of Georgia will be honorably discharged from the Marines a week from tomorrow.

Last April, having first choice in the pro league draft, the Lions put down the name of Sinkwich, a Marine reserve, on the gamble that he might be of post-war value. Now it is wholly possible that he'll make the war-time Lions a top contender for the title.

"If Sinkwich wants to play football, we'll be very eager to sign him," declared Coach Gus Dorais when informed that the Marine Corps at Parris Island, S. C., had announced Sinkwich's discharge "because he is physically unqualified for officers' candidate class."

The Marines gave no further details on his physical condition.

Presumably Sinkwich should have no great difficulties arriving at salary terms with the Lions. Detroit is known to have paid the top figure to Earl (Dutch) Clark and later the Lions took the contract of Byron (Whizzer) White, who reportedly drew $15,000 his first year out of college. Both stayed here a long time.

What disturbs the Detroit front office at the moment are reports that Sinkwich is many pounds above playing weight. The Lions open against the Chicago Cardinals Sept. 19 and naturally would want Frankie ready by then.

Much Expected Of Pasqua, New Redskin Tackle

Willie Wilkin, sole survivor of the Redskins star tackle quartet of last year, who has been preparing himself for 60-minute ball games this season, is as pleased as Coach Dutch Bergman with the showing to date of Joe Pasqua, who was plucked out of the hat by the 'Skins when the Cleveland Rams quit the league.

Pasqua, who played college ball at Southern Methodist, may start against the Green Bay Packers Sunday in Baltimore in the first of the 'Skins' three exhibition games against league rivals. He will be playing against his partner of last year, Chet Adams, now a Packer tackle by the same grab-bag route.

A 225-pounder, 6 feet 1½ inches, Pasqua has been hitting a fast pace in the 'Skins' College Park practice sessions and appears ready for rough work and lots of it. He may team with Clyde Shugart, converted from guard, with Wilkin pairing with Roman Bentz.

The kickoff will be at 2 o'clock.

Shoreham Barney Breeskin's swing unit and George Croft's Glee Club will afford the musical extras for the game Sunday in Baltimore. The Redskin band, upped to 110 pieces this year under the direction of John D'Andelet, including a 30-piece drum and bugle corps directed by Richard Viancour, has had only two practices and will make a later appearance . . . Dr. Clarence Spears will scout the Giants and Bears Sunday in Buffalo for the 'Skins . . . Packer Coach Curly Lambeau was quoted in Baltimore yesterday as saying the Packers are better than last year. Nobody has said that yet about the 'Skins . . . The Redskins will leave College Park tomorrow at the early hour of 8 a.m., and will breakfast in Baltimore.

Charlie Hoff, Pole Vault And Quisling, Murdered

Stockholm, Sept. 3 (AP).—Charlie Hoff, the first man to threaten seriously the 14-foot mark in the pole vault and for the last three years high in Vidkun Quisling's Norwegian government, was found murdered near Oslo, the Swedish press reported today.

Although he never cleared 14 feet until after Sabin Carr of Yale and Lee Barnes of Southern California had reached that height, Hoff hung up a world record of 13 feet 6 inches.

Sewell Becomes Year's First 20-Game Winner

Rip Allows Eight Hits, but Cub Errors Permit Pirates to Collect Victory, 5 to 1

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 3.—Truett (Rip) Sewell became the major leagues' first 20-game winner today when he pitched the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 5 to 1 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

The big 35-year-old right-hander had the way made easy by five Chicago errors which permitted the Pirates to collect their five runs, all unearned. Cub Catcher Clyde McCullough twice was charged with interferring with batters. Each time the Bucs scored two runs after the interference.

The Pirates made only seven hits off Eddie Hanyzewski and Henry Wyse while the Cubs made eight off Sewell.

3-Run Homer In 9th Wins For Tigers, 8-5

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Sept. 3.—With two out in the ninth inning, Pinky Higgins smashed a three-run homer today to give the Detroit Tigers an 8-to-5 victory over the St. Louis Browns and a 3-to-0 edge in their series.

The Tigers scored five runs off Al Hollingsworth in the fourth, but on four unearned runs the Browns overcame this margin and squared the count in the eighth. With Roger Cramer on second and two out in the ninth, Hollingsworth passed Rudy York to get at Higgins, who presently belted his ninth homer.

Two Seeded Stars Bow In Nat'l Play

Margaret Osborne Frankie Parker Lose in Singles At Forest Hills

By the Associated Press

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 3.—Two ranking favorites, Corpl. Frankie Parker of the Army Air Force and Margaret Osborne of San Francisco, were swept out of the National Singles Tennis Championships today. With them went Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Cooke, 1941 women's title holder, who found that she wasn't ready for a comeback after a year's absence from the courts.

Parker, who has been playing in the championships for a dozen years since making his first appearance when he was only 16, found once more that he was an "almost" player. Seeded at the head of the draw on the strength of his reaching the final with Lieut. Ted Schroeder last year, Parker proved no match for seventh-seeded Lieut Joe Hunt of the Navy and went down in straight sets, 8—6, 6—2, 6—3.

Miss Osborne Bows

Miss Osborne, ranked third on the women's list, went down 6—3, 3—6, 7—5, before the strong, steady stroking of Dorothy May Bundy, eighth-seeded player, from Santa Monica, Calif. Doris Hart of Miami, national girl's title holder and ranked one notch above Mrs. Cooke in the seedings, blasted the former champion out with a display of sheer power, 6—1, 6—3.

Others who advanced to the semifinals in matches that went strictly according to form were Francisco (Pancho) Segura, who has won every tournament he entered previously this summer; Coast Guardsman Jack Kramer of Los Angeles, former national champion and Davis Cup doubles player; William Talbert of Cincinnati, and the top-raking pair of women players, Pauline Betz of Los Angeles, and Louise Brough of Beverly Hills.

It was a toss-up between Hunt and Segura for today's most impressive performance. The gesticulating little South American won more easily, beating National Clay Court Champion Seymour Greenberg of Chicago, 6—2, 6—4, 6—1, in a match that gave him ample revenge for the setback he received in the Southampton round-robin tourney.

Stronger Opposition

Hunt faced much stronger opposition. After the long first set, Hunt gained confidence and played a daring forcing game that was just the thing to beat Parker. He pounded Frankie's weak forehand with deep, powerful drives then moved to the net for kills.

Kramer, seeded third and a popular "dark horse" choice, routed Young Jack Tuero of New Orleans, 6—1, 6—2, 6—4, and Talbert, No. 4, outlasted Lieut. Elwood Cooke of the Navy, 6—1 4—6, 8—6, 6—4.

Miss Betz, defending her women's title, trounced Dorothy Head of Berkeley, Calif., 6—0, 6—1, and Miss Brough, playing erratically, won 3—6, 6—3, 7—5, over Mary Arnold of Los Angeles.

D. C. Players Bow

The last of the Washington area players were eliminated from the tournament in the semifinals of the men's doubles and the mixed doubles.

Seaman John Kramer and Corpl. Frank Walker of Los Angeles defeated Lieut. John Van Ryn of Washington and Lieut. Joseph Hunt of Annapolis, 5—7, 6—4, 6—4, 6—4, in the men's doubles. Lieut. and Mrs. Van Ryn were defeated by Louise Brough, Beverly Hills, Calif. and Robert Falkenburg Hollywood, Calif., 6—4, 6—4, in the mixed doubles.

Dodgers Beat Giants For Seventh in Row

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Sept. 3.—The Dodgers won their seventh straight game today, beating the Giants, 4 to 1, in a twilight game behind Whit Wyatt's effective pitching.

In chalking up his tenth victory of the season Wyatt blanked the Giants after the first inning when Ernie Lombardi singled Johnny Rucker home.

The Dodgers made only five hits off three Giant pitchers, but bunched two of them with three walks to score three runs in the fourth and knock out starter Ken Chase. A double by Luis Olmo drove in the tying and what proved to be the winning run. Mickey Owen's fly brought in the third tally. In the sixth Arkie Vaughan doubled and scored on Billy Herman's single.

Bobby Also Aids in 5-4 Victory By Scoring Two Runs With Single

By the Associated Press

Boston, Sept. 3.—A double steal worked by Jo-Jo White and Bob Estalella gave the lowly Philadelphia Athletics the margin of victory today in a 5-to-4 triumph over the Boston Red Sox in the opening game of a brief weekend series.

The steal climaxed a three-run sixth-inning after Estalella's single with the bases loaded scored two runs. Boston came back with three runs in the seventh, including a pinch-hit double by Manager Joe Cronin.

Best-Ball Lead Goes to Nelson And McSpaden

By the Associated Press

Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 3.—Lord Byron Nelson admitted that he played the best round of golf in his life today when he paired with Jug McSpaden to post a best-ball of 62, 11 strokes under par, and sail into the lead of the $5000 Golden Valley Invitational Team Matches.

Nelson and McSpaden won four holes—thus picking up 4 points in the minus-plus system—in match play against Craig Wood and Jimmy Demaret. The Wood-Demaret combination slipped to tail-end position in the classy field of eight twosomes, although carding a best-ball medal of 66.

Margins of plus—1 were compiled by Willie Goggin-Toney Penna over Buck White-Ky Laffoon; Lloyd Mangrum-Sam Byrd over Bill Kaiser-Johnny Revolta and Harry Cooper-Pvt. Chick Harbet over Sergt. Jim Turnesa-Mike Turnesa.

William J. Brown, Famous Referee, Dies

Garrison, N. Y., Sept. 3 (AP).—William J. Brown, 69, former member of the New York State Athletic Commission and a famous boxing referee, died today at the health farm he operated here for the past 35 years.

Known as "Blunt Bill" to the boxing world and the scores of businessmen who had gone to his garrison retreat for hard-work build-up treatments, he traveled the road from wrestler to boxing promoter and, finally, boxing referee before becoming proprietor of the resort.

Horse Pays $434, Daily Double $3888 for N. Y. Records

Spirit, at $47.10, Completes Double; Only 15 Winning Tickets Are Sold

By the Associated Press

Aqueduct Race Track, N. Y., Sept. 3.—The longest straight price on a horse since mutuel betting came to New York in 1940 thrilled a large crowd here this afternoon. The electrifying return was made in the first race by J. S. Summers' Markobob, which closed with a rush to win by a half length at odds of $434 for $2. His place price was $168.30 and the show, $60.40.

The race was a 5½-furlong dash for maiden 2-year-old platers. Markobob started only once previously, a few days before, and was a distant seventh in a field of 10. Of the $110,303 wagered on today's opener, only $545 was on Markobob. It was split up $228 straight, $133 place and $184 show.

Pascuma Aboard

Tony Pascuma, a little veteran who rides only a fair share of mounts, drove the longshot first home. Dry Goods was second, with the intended "good thing," Play Grier, third a length and a half farther away.

No horse had ever paid even $300 in New York mutuels before.

When J. F. Byers' Spirit won the second race at $47.10 for two, the 3-year-old filly completed a record New York daily double worth $3888 for two. The former high double for the State was $1870.80, recorded at Belmont Park last October 6. There were 15 winning tickets sold on today's combination.

Broke Record

Markobob broke second and was rated along while Corrou, Dry Goods and Play Grier showed the way. Pascuma called upon Markobob as they swung for home and the chestnut youngster charged up on the outside with a spurt that saw him getting in front in the final strides.

Spirit came from even farther back to win the second. Under the British veteran, Johnny Longden, the $1500 plater finally reached contention in the stretch.

Had Bollinger won the second race, there would have been a new national record daily double return of $11,664. The American mark is $10,772.40, dating back to August 14, 1939, when Joy Bet and Merry Caroline registered at Washington Park.

Hialeah Cuts Stake Purses

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Sept. 3.—A program of 11 stake races this winter was announced today for Hialeah Park when Florida's war-disrupted horse racing program is resumed.

The Widener Handicap will be run March 4 as a $25,000 event instead of the $50,000 offered in peacetime years. Minimum purses for daily races will be $1000 instead of the former $1200. Total distribution will be $550,000.

John C. Clark, president of the Miami Jockey Club, announced plans for the coming season after completing details in conferences with Sam McCormick, secretary-treasurer, and Charles J. McLennan, racing secretary.

Hialeah Park remained closed during all of last season because of the ban on automobile pleasure driving. The coming season will run for 50 days, from January 7 through March 4.

Lewis Seeking Bout With Tuesday Winner

D. C. Middleweight Championship at Stake In Mamakos-Garner Set-To at Stadium

Stoney Lewis, whom John Garner defeated to win the District light-heavyweight championship, today will petition the District Boxing Commission for an immediate bout with the winner of the Steve Mamakos-Garner District middleweight championship Tuesday night at Griffith Stadium, with both titles on the line.

Lewis lost to Garner last spring after he threw his arm out of socket in the third round of their title bout. Lewis not only wants the winners' middleweight title at stake, but also will ask that Garner's light heavyweight title, which is not at stake in his bout with Mamakos, be in jeopardy regardless of who wins Tuesday.

Promoter Joe Turner announced yesterday he had closed out an additional eight-rounder for Tuesday. It will send Eddie Kane, possessor of 14 straight victories, including a decision over Joe Torres, into action against Pete Galiano, Baltimore veteran. Johnny Cockfield, transplanted New York Negro featherweight, and Jose Domingo Rozo, Venezuelan titleholder, clash in the eight-round semifinal.

Kiefer Nosed Out by Ford In U. S. Swim

By the Associated Press

New London, Conn., Sept. 3.—Alan Ford, Yale's Balboa (Canal Zone) bullet, and Adolph Kfeier of the Bainbridge (Md.) Naval School, hit the finish line at the end of the thrilling 220-yard free-style sprint in identical time today, but the medal went to the Eli by an eyelash as the three-day men's national AAU swimming championships opened.

Sandy-haired Ford and blond Kiefer, for years the Nation's top backstroker, battled it out all the way, with hardly a stroke separating them. So close were they that the judges deliberated for 10 minutes before coming up with the verdict.

The time of 2:19.4 suffered in comparison with the world record 2:07.9 Bill Smith of Ohio State turned in last year, but the show the lads put on was tops.

This event was the highlight of the first day of the meet, which, due to war conditions, lacks the luster of former years. Among those missing are Smith and Keo Nakama, teammates who dominated the 1942 championships, and conspicuous by its absence was the usual stirring fight for the team title. Yale, with its 39 entries, can't miss being Ohio State's successor.

The mile race was a snap for smooth-stroking Paul Maloney of the Buffalo (N. Y.) Athletic Club. The 17-year-old school boy led all the way and finished nearly half the length of the 55-yard pool in front of John McCarthy of the University of Michigan, his time was 23:06.5, which compared with Namaka's world's mark of 20:09 made here a year ago.

In the 330-yard medley relay, which looked more like a Yale intramurals, the Blue "A" trio of Gillet, Jackson and Ford won going away in 3:34.5.

Floyd Stauffler of Columbus, Ohio, took the three-meter fancy dive with 131.63 points, after getting tough competition from Jack Calhoun, Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Mrs. Goodman, Mrs. Falls Tie In Cup Play

Mrs. W. Marion Falls turned down undisputed possession of low gross in the Muncaster Cup tournament at Washington Golf and Country Club yesterday to play off a low net tie with Mrs. H. H. Goodman today in the 36-hole medal play handicap event.

Mrs. Falls put together a pair of 88's and deducted a 10 handicap from each for a 156 net while Mrs. Goodman, a former Washington Post Clss B Cup champion, now a Class A player, had 97 and 95, minus 18 allowance strokes each time for 156.

Mrs. Falls Best of Day

Mrs. Falls 88 yesterday was by far the best round of a day not suited to low scoring. Mrs. Falls' 176 gross was 5 shots better than the 87-94, 181, of club champion Mrs. Charles Lynch, who was awarded first gross.

Mrs. Douglas Tschiffely, first-round leader, finished out of the prize list by going 10 shots over her first day's 87 with a 97 yesterday.

Mrs. John DeLashmutt won low net in Class B with 99, 103, minus a combined handicap of 46 for 156, while Mrs. W. A. Dinneen had 105, 104—48, 161.

Mrs. Fay Low Net Scorer

Mrs. Ed Fay was low net scorer in Class C with 112, 111—50, 173, with Mrs. W. E. McDonald second, 123, 125—72, 176.

The women's club championship at Washington will be played the first week in October, Mrs. R. E. Hotze, publicity chairman, announced.

Red Czar to Tackle Singh on Mat Card

The Red Czar, a hooded grappler, and Nanjo Singh, "Cobra Clutch" King, have been signed to headline next Wednesday night's wrestling show at Turner's Arena.

The Czar gave way to two other masked grapplers—The Mask and The Purple Streak—due to heavy booking in the Midwest, but is back in the East craving action.

Singh will be making his first local start in four months.

OPA Penalizes Firm Run by OPA Official

By the Associated Press

Boston, Sept. 3.—Laurans Bros., Inc., New Bedford wholesale grocers, whose vice president is chief of processed foods in the food rationing section of the OPA wholesale division in Washington, today were prohibited from dealing in sugar for two months and were placed on probation for an additional six months by an OPA hearing commissioner after he heard evidence of a 105,099-pound shortage in the firm's sugar inventory.

Vice President William Laurans, who is now and has been since the fall of 1941 employed in his Washington OPA post, was quoted by OPA investigators as explaining that due to pressure of his other duties in Washington he has turned over the management of the corporation to his brother, Joseph. Laurans said that part of the shortage was attributable to breakage in handling and repacking the sugar, and that some of the loss was caused by carelessness of employes, pointing out that competent and experienced help was difficult to obtain.

In his decision, Chief OPA Hearing Commissioner Arthur L. Brown said he had been unable to find "any evidence of an intentional, willful and deliberate violation on the part of the respondent," but that nevertheless: "The inescapable conclusion from the facts disclosed in this proceeding is that there has been an illegal transfer of substantial amounts of sugar by the respondent's employes for whom it, as the custodian of a rationed commodity, is legally responsible."

In the hearing report Joseph Laurans, who held the position of president and treasurer, although he had been inactive for ten years in the firm's management until his brother's departure for Washington, was quoted as saying that salesmen and truck drivers entrusted with responsibility for collecting sugar coupons had sometimes failed to make collection.

Mrs. Roosevelt Is Honored by Australians

By the Associated Press

Canberra, Australia (Saturday), Sept. 4.—Wartime customs and an old tradition go into discard today at a state luncheon for Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who arrived yesterday by air from New Zealand.

The wife of the American President is the first woman ever invited to eat in the Parliament House dining room. She beats Australia's first women Parliament members, recently elected, to this distinction by a short time.

Prime Minister Curtin personally approved the menu of turkey, crayfish, vegetables, fruit, cranberry sauce and loganberry tart.

The luncheon is just one indication of the greatest flutter of excitement this capital has seen since the arrival of Gen. Douglas MacArthur here in the early, dark days of the war. General MacArthur was the first American to appear before the Australian Parliament. Mrs. Roosevelt will be the second.

Mrs. Roosevelt was greeeted at the airport by Governor General and Lady Gowrie. In a special broadcast to the nation she expressed pleasure in being here.

She said the women of America were grateful to the Australians for the care they have given American soldiers in the Commonwealth.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Jerry Kluttz now is on tour of various Government installations throughout the Nation, where 92 per cent of the country's Federal employes work. Only 8 per cent of those employed by Uncle Sam are stationed in Washington.

Salt Lake Is Center Of Vast New Arsenal

Salt Lake City.—From this city you can see the American version of the move to behind the Urals. Like the Russians, we have centered much of the war material, equipment, and supplies that has and will be used in Pacific battlefields in this war-throbbing valley, protected on three sides by treacherous mountains and on the fourth by the Great Salt Lake.

This area has been converted into the citadel of the West from a slow-moving farm and mining region. It's as bomb-proof as any city can be. The surrounding mountains naturally conceal the war installations—many a plane has cracked up in them—but even so, adequate precautions have been taken to deal with enemy raiders. The West, remember, was fearful of a Jap attack after Pearl Harbor.

The Army and Navy today have more than a score of offices and installations in this area and they employ more than 30,000 civilians. Total Federal population in the Salt Lake-Ogden-Tooele area is estimated at 37,000.

The figure may not be impressive in Washington where there are nearly 300,000 Government workers but the proportion of Federal employes here to the rest of the population is about as great as it is in the Nation's Capital.

And this area is crying for manpower. Manpower is the one problem that hasn't been solved. The Government is pleading for 8000 additional people and when it gets them this Salt Lake-Ogden-Tooele area will be a more concentrated center of Federal population, in proportion, than the Nation's Capital. The number of Federal workers in Washington has steadily decreased since last December.

I was out at the huge Naval Supply Depot near here this afternoon and a Navy officer was looking over a crew of laborers who had reported for work. "Oh, there's a man!" the officer shouted. Yes; it was a man, a lone man and 89 women, laborers all.

And they have no prejudices out here against women, Negroes, cripples, midgets, teen-aged boys and girls or anyone else who's able to do any sort of job. They've been scraping the bottom of the labor market for months. War Manpower estimates that the area immediately needs 22,000 employes to supply Uncle Sam and the war industries.

In peacetime, the Salt Lake-Ogden-Tooele area had less than 200,000 people. You see, the labor isn't here; it must be imported from surrounding States. Ogden has jumped from 40,000 to 90,000 and Salt Lake from 145,000 to 185,000 in three years. The entire State had only 550,000 people in 1940. Today it's around 630,000.

Washington Terrace, for example, is a Federal Public Housing project between here and Ogden. It has 1400 units. When the war workers at Government installations moved in the project overnight became the sixth most populated place in the State. That gives you some idea of how isolated the State is and how it has blossomed since the war.

Uncle Sam is the big man out here. He's the largest employer; the biggest landowner; the best tenant, and, generally speaking, the best employer. Some of the war industries are paying better salaries for higher-grade people.

The war boom has dislocated the cities and changed the drab face of the desert and the genial people here seem to like it. Already State leaders are laying plans to keep the war industries in operation after the war. And it's quite probable that they'll remain here for the most part.

Fort Douglas, with about 250 employes, was the only War Department installation here before the war emergency. It is a permanent installation. But several of the new installations will be permanent and they'll be used to store tons of munitions as an insurance against future wars. The Ogden Air Depot, Deseret Chemical Warfare Depot and the Toole Ordnance Depot undoubtedly will be permanent. The Naval Supply Depot is of semipermanent construction.

Also lying sofely behind the protecting and awesome mountains are the Dugway Chemical Warfare Proving Grounds, United States District Engineers, Pacific Division, United States Engineers; Salt Lake Army Air Base, Kearns Basic Training Center, Headquarters of the Ninth Service Command, Army Service Forces Depot, Ogden Ordnance Depot, 18th Replacement Wing, 9th Transportation Zone, Ordnance Service Command Shops, Bushnell General Hospital, Camp Williams and several smaller offices.

Several of the offices were moved from the vulnerable West Coast back here where it is more comfortable in time of war.

Please Forward

St. Louis—The pilot had a novel idea—making a date by personal airmail—but his delivery was inaccurate.

Mrs. J. W. Upp said she found a note dropped from a bomber which zoomed low over her house. It read: "Will see you tonight. Olar." Mrs. Upp said firmly it was a case of wrong address, she doesn't know Olar.

Tomato Record?

Danielson, Conn.—Vasilis Berris grew a plant in his Victory garden with 20 tomatoes on one stem, 15 of them large sized and 5 small. Local authorities claim it's a record; that 12 tomatoes grown on one stem by one Mayme Rhode of Louisville, Ky., was the best previous achievement known.

AFL Officer Sees Threat In Work Law

Maryland Organizer Says Federation May Seek to Test Statute in Court

By Lin Celdon
Post Staff Writer.

Satisfied after a one-day investigation that the Maryland so-called "work or fight" law holds definite threats to organized labor, Joseph Gillis, American Federation of Labor organizer for the State, last night said the matter had been turned over to Robert J. Buxbaum, president of the State Federation, for possible prosecution of a test of its legality.

Gillis predicted labor papers throughout the State would publish the entire history of the law and its results and added that in his interpretation a "truck driver could be haled into court and paroled into the custody of an employer not of his choice," if the driver refused a job.

The organizer said, in commenting on his viewpoint of possible reactions by organized labor that "if a judge tried to pull any such un-American practices in the Baltimore area, dire consequences would result."

Called Constant Threat

The law, if allowed to stand, said Gillis, would be a constant threat against labor, organized and not organized. Men on strike, who had not worked five days in a week, as prescribed by law, could apparently be arrested and paroled for work purposes into the custody of the employer they were striking against, if the precedent set in Berlin, Md., was carried further, he said.

In the Berlin case a man was paroled into the custody of a complaining witness, who testified the man refused to work for him. The parole carried a threat of 90 days in the Maryland House of Correction, if violated.

In the meantime, Gov. Herbert O'Conor continued his middle-of-the-road policy. The law, although passed by the Maryland Legislature, is definitely not a State law, O'Conor was reported as saying, because it applies to but 14 of the State's 23 counties.

The Governor last night indicated he would welcome a test of the law's legality. He reiterated his former stand that "the question of the legality of the measure is not entirely free from doubt." He said, too, that "this is indicated by the attorney general who, in an opinion to me, states that 'We are unable to definitely state that this act would be held constitutional, but, on the other hand, we cannot definitely state that it would be held unconstitutional.'"

But neither the Governor nor William Walsh, attorney general, has indicated a method by which the constitutionality of the law can be tested. Hugh Meade, an assistant attorney general, has said he knows of no law in Maryland which allows any judge to parole a man into the custody of the person who had him arrested. Walsh would only comment that "no prior opinion exists on which to base an opinion."

Since the law applies only to counties that want it, the Governor said through a spokesman, a court test need not be made in the Maryland Court of Appeals but may be made in a county court.

V-Man Award Is Presented to Woman Volunteer

The V-man award of the week went to Mrs. Nathaniel B. Aaronson, 4514 Connecticut ave. nw., who has devoted 3500 hours to volunteer war work, the Junior Board of Commerce announced yesterday.

Mrs. Aaronson serves at the Union Station lounge and bond booth, the Pepsi Cola Service Center, and at the information desk of the Service Men's Club. She also is files and supplies chairman for the Stage Door Canteen.

Bond Buying Means Less Men Dying

Few Words Used To Explain Reason For Drive Which Starts Thursday

Fifteen simple, plain American words best describe the Third War Loan drive for 15 billion dollars, 94 millions of which are to be raised in the District of Columbia starting Thursday. They are:

"Your name on a small bond can mean one less name on a small cross."

Admitting there will be names on crosses, the Treasury Department reminds bond purchasers it is up to them how many there will be and this depends on how effectively the public "Backs the Attack."

Drive Starts Thursday

The Third War Loan drive, to start with a galaxy of stage, screen and name band stars on the steps of the Treasury Wednesday night, when the President will make a national broadcast, also has its more serious aspect.

It is the difference between buying one extra small bond for $100 over and above the usual purchases that will tell the tale, they say. And purchasers are being urged to make it a single $100 bond rather than several smaller bonds because of the time saved in less clerical work and costs involved.

Employes of the District will do their part, Walter L. Fowler, District budget officer, promised yesterday, following his appointment as chairman of the District employes canvass.

Employe Appeal

Fowler's budget is $1,040,000, he said. He will appoint department heads in the District government his subchairmen and they in turn will appoint committees that will call on each of the 16,000 District employes. Fowler was appointed by John A. Reilly, chairman of the District committee. He held the same post in previous campaigns, the first and second drives.

Theodore N. Gamble, national director of the campaign, said yesterday a "preliminary survey to the Third War Loan indicates America can take it and the great majority fully realize the war is not won."

Cafe Owners Fined $200 For Bad Fish

Charged with selling decomposed fish to two patrons, the operators of a restaurant at 145 B st. se. were fined $200 yesterday by Judge John P. McMahon in Municipal Court.

The codefendants were George Ganos and William Andros, who failed to appear in court on August 23 when the case was scheduled but the judge set aside the forfeiture of the $50 collateral in the case and ordered the defendants brought to trial.

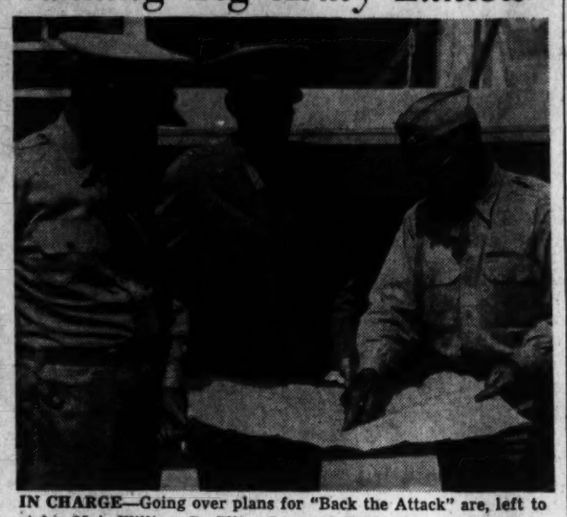
Health Department Inspector William Wilson testified that chemical analysis of the fish supply in the restaurant showed that it was decomposed. He said the Health Department acted on a complaint that two customers who said the food was bad were refused their money back when they protested. One of them, testimony showed, took his fish to the Health Department, which found it was unfit for human consumption. A later check on a platter of fish in the restaurant showed that it was generally decomposing, Wilson said.

Other charges against the restaurant operators were possession of a dirty refrigerator, floor, stove and racks.

When counsel for the restaurateurs protested they were "doing all they could," Judge McMahon replied, "This is one of the most flagrant health violations that has come to my attention."

The case was prosecuted by Assistant Corporation Counsel Edward Beard.

Planning Big Army Exhibit



IN CHARGE—Going over plans for "Back the Attack" are, left to right: Maj. William R. Ellis, Corps of Engineers, area engineer in charge of the show; Brig. Gen. W. A. Danielson, commanding general, Memphis Army Service Forces Depot, who visited the show, and Lieut. Col. Frank T. McCabe, officer in charge of "Back the Attack" the greatest array of modern armament ever brought together by the Army for show purposes.

Yesterday motors of burly prime-movers roared, a bulldozer clattered about the 300-foot arena where the "motion shows" for the mighty exhibit will perform three times daily . . . dozens of carpenters' hammers clattered like distant machine-gun fire, saws buzzed and show officials in raincoated clusters smoothed out "bugs;" the nozzles of 90-mm antiaircraft and "Long Tom" and the ponderous 240-mm howitzer scraped the leaden skyline. Dozens of O. D. tents housed busy soldier work teams carrying on temporarily under cover.

Sanded grounds today will aid greatly the operations of the workingmen.

Dozens of floodlights were completely installed, loud speakers were ready for operation and the impressive 126-foot outdoor stage was all but complete last night.

In the meantime the gargantua of the iron juggernauts—a massive T1 60-ton heavy tank, was due to arrive on the grounds this morning. This mighty leviathan is equal in size and displacement to any similar vehicle in existence. Ordnance experts believe it is superior to anything the Axis may offer.

WAC Band Expected

The WAC Band from Daytona Beach, Fla., will arrive as one of the features of the show tomorrow, to be stationed throughout "Back the Attack" at Arlington Farms.

Meanwhile along with the 60-ton tank, the heaviest if not the biggest mobile artillery field piece—the Ordnance's 8-inch gun—will arrive on the exhibit grounds to occupy a key position along with the tons of other new armament which will be shown.

During World War I, this huge artillery was employed exclusively as a railway gun. The weight of the gun and breech mechanism was 21 tons. It fired a 260-pound projectile a distance of about 18 miles.

Fires 20 Miles

The weight of the present gun and breech mechanism of the modern mobile field version of this great fortress crumbling weapon is 15 tons. It fires a 240-pound armor-piercing, or high explosive projectile, a distance of 20 miles.

It is therefore lighter and has greater range than its World War I counterpart.

The gun which will roll in this morning has a higher muzzle velocity than the gun of 25 years ago. Its damaging effect has been increased twice over, according to ordnance experts.

The fact a gun of this size and weight can be used in the field is an outstanding achievement of both gun makers and automotive experts, officers say.

The 8-inch uses an identical carriage with the 240-mm. howitzer.

This highlights the interchangeable nature of much of the field equipment which the Ordnance Department supplies the Field Artillery units. The same carriage and prime movers serve the Army's heaviest hitting field pieces—the 240-mm. howitzer and the 8-inch gun.

Special Army "K" and "C" rations developed for the use of the American soldier in combat is expected to be among the most interesting of all the exhibits throughout the show.

Described by a general officer as one of the oustanding developments of the war, the "K" and "C" rations are designated as combat food for use by the soldiers when field kitchens are unavailable.

The "K" ration includes both defense and graham biscuits, meat, eggs, cheese, dextrose tablets, beverage powder, coffee or cocoa, a chocolate bar and chewing gum.

"C" rations come in sealed cans and consists of cooked foods which may either be eaten hot or cold. A day's ration consists of three meat units and three units containing biscuits, confection, sugar and beverage . . . also on display at the Army show will be the new space saving dehydrated foods.

WAC Exhibition

WAC's who besides providing the "action band" for the "Back the Attack" exhibits, will have a prominent and novel display on the grounds, including a model recruiting office.

At the WAC exhibit an entire WAC wardrobe will be on hand for the visitors to examine . . . and some of the clothing may be tried on by spectators, it was promised.

A cross section of WAC quarters will be set up at the exhibit and photographic murals will illustrate WACs engaged in most of the 155 essential duties, formerly performed by men.

Club Hikes Tomorrow

The Capital Hiking Club will go to Millbrook Pond tomorrow after assembling at the Mount Rainier terminal at 9:30 a. m. Hikers should bring along a lunch, canteen and swimming suit.

Heavy Rains to Aid Dairymen Now Seeking Milk-Price Boost

Rain drenched pastures in the Washington milkshed yesterday were expected to bring relief to nearby dairymen as Joseph H. Blandford, chairman of the Maryland USDA War Board, and Dudley C. Aist, administrative assistant to the war board, announced appointment of a committee to arrange distribution of Federal feed shipments made necessary due to the drought.

Up to a late hour last evening more rain had fallen than had in weeks, the Weather Bureau said.

Exactly 1 inch of rain fell from 2:30 a. m. to 8:30 p. m. yesterday, the bureau said, and .47 inch from 2:30 p. m. to 8:30 p. m.

Dr. T. B. Symons, head of the agriculture extension service of the University of Maryland, predicted the rain would revive grass in the burned out pasture lands and thus lessen the estimated 40,000 gallon daily shortage this fall and winter.

Despite the fact the rains were the first to soak the land since June, Dr. Symons said Maryland farmers had lost only about 30,000 tons of hay out of their anticipated 600,000 tons.

This was because the hay was harvested early before the stringent effects of the drought were felt.

Normally dairymen in this section are unable to grow sufficient hay to carry the herds through the winter and most of them have to purchase the feed on the open market. However, this year they are being supplied hay at greatly reduced prices with the Federal Government providing a subsidy of from $10 to $15 a ton.

Despite this the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association asked the Virginia Milk Commission and the Department of Agriculture for permission to raise the price of milk by 1½ cents a quart. One of the reasons advanced for argument is the effects of the drought. A decision is expected within two weeks.

However, a spokesman for the Department of Agriculture dairy section said should producers in the Washington milk shed be granted an increase in price, similar increases would have to be granted to dairymen in the New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore areas an order to prevent a heavy divergence of milk into the higher Washington market.

Garden Exhibit Sept. 16

A Victory Garden exhibition, sponsored by the local Victory Garden Committee, will be held September 16 in the Washington Gas Light Co. auditorium and not on September 15 as stated in The Post. Winners of city-wide contests will be announced and prizes will be awarded during the one-day exhibit.

Army's New Tugboat Tractor Demonstrated in Tidal Basin

The first public demonstration of a new marine tractor, designed to perform the service of a tug boat with a reduction in crew members, cost and time of manufacture, was staged yesterday in the Tidal Basin.

The gray all-steel tractor was inspected by officers from headquarters of the water division of the Army Transportation Corps and the Army Service Forces.

Plowing a mile up the Basin at top speed of 12 miles, the flat-bottomed boat operated by gasoline proved it is more easily maneuvered than the ordinary tug. The tractor, most valuable for use in calm, inland waters, can be dismantled into four separate parts and shipped with facility in airplanes to fighting zones.

Capt. Stanley A. Hunt, operations officer of the water division of the Transportation Corps, compared the advantages of the new tractor with the tug in this way:

"This boat will pull from four to six barges while the tug usually takes only three. It requires a crew of two or three men as compared with seven to nine men for a tug. Rolling off the production line in a week instead of 18 months required for completion of the tug, it costs only about half as much as a tug of comparable size."

Captain Hunt also explained it performs the job in about half the time required by a tug because it is more easily maneuvered and does not need a highly experienced seaman at the helm.

Thirty-eight feet long and 15 feet wide, the boat weighs 26 tons and its two engines have 290 horsepower. It will pull 200 tons. Although only four or five have been turned out, several hundred are now on order.

Library Unit Advocates 4 NewBranches

Would Buy Ground Now for After-War Development; Total Budget $872,797

Four new branch libraries costing $190,000 to be built after the war on land to be acquired immediately were advocated in a report by the Board of Library Trustees to the District Commissioners yesterday.

The report also requested an increase of $237,276 over last year's appropriation which would bring the new fiscal year appropriation to $872,787.

Two-Day Hearing For D. C. Taxpayers

A budget hearing at which all taxpaying residents are eligible to participate will be held beginning September 16 and concluding Friday September 17, it has been announced.

Formal interventions must be filed with the secretary to the Board of Commissioners not later than September 13.

The new branch libraries, under the proposal, would be built in Cleveland Park, Brookland, Pleasant Plains and Congress Heights. Sites for the buildings have been tentatively selected, it was said.

The postwar growth of the city, the report says, will require $85,000 for overtime and pay rises. The new book account will require $20,000, which represents an increase of 7.5 cents to 10 cents per capita, the report shows. The sum, however, represents a lower figure than the 11 per cent set for communities of the size of Washington.

The trustees contend that the fund for the purchase of new books in recent years has decreased in spite of the fact the population increase has been almost 42 per cent and the number of registered book borrowers has increased more than two-fold.

The trustees ask $30,000 for binding purposes. This is an increase of $10,000 over current expenditures. New employes requested are headed by a divisional chief to place handicapped children; additional employes for expanded programs and hospitals, and teacher and attendants for deaf, mute and blind children.

City News In Brief

Despite the critical labor shortage here, an average of 532 checks for unemployment insurance was issued each week during July and August, according to figures made public by the District Unemployment Compensation Board, headed by John A. Marshall.

Reaching a weekly average of $8185, the checks represent increased weekly payments over amounts previously paid to unemployed persons.

Evidence, however, that the usual number of unemployed in Washington has dwindled considerably, is Marshall's statement that during the first six months of this year not even the interest on the $37,396,000 District unemployment compensation fund has been used up.

3 Park Trips Tomorrow

A Sunday naturalist program, including a historical tour of Lafayette Square, a bird walk around the Zoo and a tree study around the Capitol Grounds, will be conducted by National Capital Parks of the National Park Service.

A naturalist will meet the bird group at Klingle rd. and Beach dr. at 7:30 a. m. The tree study will begin at 3 p. m. in front of Grant Statue, near Second st. and Pennsylvania ave, nw.

Union Charges

Insanitation In U. S. Cafe Is Denied

Charges by the United Federal Workers of America that insanitary conditions exist at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing's cafeteria brought three developments last night.

1. Alvin W. Hall, director of the bureau said he had investigated the charges and found no truth in them.

2. Daniel H. Schwartz, national organizer for UFWA, a CIO union, said additional evidence of "insanitary conditions" had been discovered as recently as Thursday, and that the union had requested the Welfare and Recreation Association, which operates cafeterias in most other Government buildings, to express willingness to take over at the Bureau of Engraving. Schwartz said the union would also request the Treasury Department to allow the Welfare and Recreation Association to take over.

3. Dr. W. K. Sharp, jr., local area director of the United States Public Health Service, said his department would make an inspection at the cafeteria today or Monday "if we find that we have jurisdiction there."

On Nonprofit Basis

The cafeteria is operated on a cooperative nonprofit basis by which all employes of the bureau are members of the association and elect the directors.

The Welfare and Recreation Association is operated under the same system, but on a much larger scale. The union has been trying for at least a year to get Welfare and Recreation Association into the Bureau of Engraving "because it feels it is the most efficient organization," Schwartz said.

Hall explained as director of the bureau he did not control the cafeteria, but it was the duty of the bureau to see that the cafeteria was efficiently operated.

The union's complaint included charges there was a mouse in a soup container, worms cooked in greens, rat leavings in carrots, a caterpillar in gingerbread, chewing gum on a pie plate, fish scales in soup, that windows are screenless, silverware greasy, trays and tables smeared with leftover food and water glasses smeared with grease.

Charges Are Denied

Miss Nicie Perrell, president of the Bureau's Cafeteria Association, denied the charges. She said there was a standing committee to which employes could carry grievances about food or service. She admitted she had refused to meet with a committee appointed by the union but said she offered to confer with individual employes and members of the union.

Schwartz declared several complaints made to the grievance committee by individuals were ignored. He said the union had records of specific instances to back up each of the charges contained in the complaint.

Dr. Sharp said the course of his department, if insanitary conditions were disclosed by the inspection, would be to make suggestions for improvements.

Fiscal Expert Testifies

W. G. Gilman, who represented himself as an expert in utilities fiscal policies, appeared as a witness yesterday for the Washington Gas Light Co. at the gas rate hearings and testified a 25 per cent increase should be added to the base rate of income allowed the company.

Under the present sliding scale arrangement the Public Utilities Commission allows the gas company a base rate of 6.5 per cent on their public property investment. This investment is in excess of 30 million dollars. Gilman said the firm had been forced to pay approximately 7 per cent as the cost for securing additional capital for the sale of stocks.

Hearings in the rate case will be continued today at 10 a. m.

New Manual Issued

Information on Washington transportation, housing and recreational facilities is included in a new manual for employes of the War Department, it was announced yesterday.

The manual of 48 pages, entitled "Your Handbook," is divided into two sections—"Your Army" and "Your Job." It is designed to acquaint new employes with the Army, their job and their new home. The supplement for employes in the Capital is entitled "Working in Washington."

The handbook is a revision of "Introduction to Employment in the War Department—A Reference Manual for Employes."

U-Boat Got New Ship On 1st Trip

Entire Crew of 69 Rescued After 34-Day Struggle, Ensign Relates

"It doesn't seem so bad, now that it's all over, but I hope my luck is better next time."

For Ensign John W. Huttel, 25, of the merchant marine, who on his first trip to sea spent 34 days in a lifeboat, after his ship was sunk by a German submarine's torpedo off the coast of North Africa, is anxious to sail again.

HUTTEL

His ship was a brand-new vessel, the James W. Denver, and most of the crew were making their first trip. There were 10 days of peaceful sailing and then at 5 o'clock in the afternoon of April 11 disaster came.

Ensign Huttel, as purser, was figuring out the position for the day when the torpedo struck. "In 20 minutes the lifeboats were manned and lowered and we had picked up all the men aboard ship, 69 in all," he stated. "We knew right away what hit us, although we never saw the submarine."

A half hour later, a second torpedo was sent into the ship and, several hours later, a third. The lifeboats hung around, but the James W. Denver sank silently in the darkness of the night.

18 in His Lifeboat

There were 18 men in Ensign Huttel's lifeboat. They had only a compass for direction and sails for navigation. The men knew they were far from shore and dared not waste their energy in rowing.

During the night the lifeboats became separated. After several days, Ensign Huttel's boat encountered a German submarine. "We got so close that some of us jumped on her deck because we were afraid our boat would capsize," he said.

The Commander of the submarine spoke English clearly, Huttel said, and after lengthy questioning, asked the men if they needed food and water. Figuring that they had plenty of stores, they asked only for cigarettes. A box was thrown to them, but the sea was so rough they couldn't recover it.

Faulty Figuring

The men figured wrong. After 20 days at sea, they ran out of rations and for two weeks had only a little water and some flying fish which jumped into the boat. "I never did like fish," Ensign Huttel grimaced, "but I ate those raw and sure enjoyed them."

They were in the lifeboat 34 days and had traveled about 1800 miles when they were picked up by a Spanish fishing boat. It was only a 60-foot boat with a crew of 11, but the small crew did everything possible to help the men.

"They gave us their beds and slept on the decks. They didn't have much food, but they gave most of what they had to us," said Ensign Huttel admiringly. The boat put in at a Spanish outpost on the Sahara Desert. From there the men were taken to the Canary Islands, on to Cadiz and Gibraltar, and finally home, arriving here July 24. Not a man of the 69 was lost at sea.

Wears Decorations

Today Ensign Huttel wears a blue-ribboned bar and a Silver Star, presented to him by the war shipping division of the Maritime Commission for having seen enemy action and having been torpedoed.

A native Washingtonian, he graduated from McKinley Tech High School and was employed by the Postoffice here before working with the Maritime Commission in Baltimore. His wife, Mrs. Ruth Huttel, lives at 1527 D st. ne.

"Some of the fellows have already shipped out on other boats," he grinned. "We're all just waiting for orders. Our luck's bound to be better next time."

District Soldier, Reported Missing, Is in Hospital

Pvt. William D. Whalen, 25, reported missing in action by the War Department, is now in a hospital overseas recovering from slight wounds, according to a telegram received Thursday by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Whalen of 1656-A Avon pl. nw.

Overseas since Christmas Day of 1942, Private Whalen told his family in a letter dated July 5, that he had just finished serving five months in the front lines at Tunisia. "We've got another little job lined up for us," he wrote at the time.

A native Washingtonian, he attended the public schools here and was employed by the Terminix Co. prior to his induction September 10, 1942. He received his basic training at Camp Croft, S. C.

Women's Club News

By Genevieve Reynolds

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

MRS. URSULA CROWLEY

Petite, black haired, brown eyed Mrs. Ursula Crowley, organizer of the Washington Unit, National Women's Security Corps, found herself in the embarrassing position of having a drill hall, a drill master but no members.

A comparatively new comer in town, she pondered the problem of getting members. Then one man's secretary from the War Production Board dropped in at her apartment in the Broadmoor. The next time she came, she had several other secretaries. It simply grew by word of mouth and in a few weeks, Mrs. Crowley thought she had 23 to be inducted. But when the night arrived for Col. Norene Ruby to induct the group into the semi-military organization she found 300 girls at the armory in Central High School waiting to be inducted.

Lieut. Crowley, who heads the NSWC, stipulated that working girls are preferred. Hence, the unit here, as well as in New York and Chicago, is composed mostly of business, professional and working girls. Object is to permit girls employed during the daytime to do their bit for the war effort. In the Washington unit you will find girls who labor 8 to 15 hours in Government offices going wherever they are needed, to type, file, work on records, etc., for various wartime agencies on a voluntary basis. Many work on the aircraft defenses all night and show up at their desk bright and early the next morning.

"I felt more could be accomplished with military training and discipline," explained Mrs. Crowley, "than by the usual girl club method." We do not permit haphazard attendance or work. Unless a member is willing to work we don't want her in the organization. If absent three times without a good excuse, the girl is automatically dropped.

Born in Germany, Lieutenant Crowley came to this country in 1937 with her husband, "Pete Crowley," an American who was employed many years by an American business firm in Germany. He is now employed by the War Production Board.

Quiet and retiring in appearance, Mrs. Crowley says that she spent little time in Germany, for she was educated in finishing schools in Switzerland and in England, where she took a business course. She speaks French, German and English fluently and knows some Italian. Frequently she did volunteer translations at the Library of Congress. Now she has her hands full guiding the National Security Women's Corps here.

As soon as someone is trained to do the job, she wants to hand over her directorship to someone else. "I don't feel it is fair for a naturalized citizen to head the organization when there are so many native born Americans," she declared. "I am simply waiting for someone to take over."

However, if the members of the Washington unit have their way, Lieutenant Crowley will continue to head the group. For they declare that she is very effecient and well liked by all.

First Round-Up

Miss Helen Benioff brought greetings from Oakland, Calif., to Washington Soroptimists at their first meeting of the season, held Wednesday in the Cabinet Room, Willard Hotel. Mrs. Rose Cohen, who was in charge of the program, wrote lyrics for the song of the day, "We're Headin' For Our First Round-Up." The entire club joined Mrs. Jane Stone, guest soloist, in singing it and as Mrs. Mary Lewis remarked, the Soroptimists would be on the rocks if it were not for Mrs. Stone. Miss Mildred Clum, president, brought the meeting to a close after many members volenteered their services for selling war bonds on the Monument Grounds, September 10 and 11 for the Third War Loan Drive.

Maryland Federation

Mrs. Walter E. Kriel, president director of the Maryland Federation of Women's Clubs, has appointed Mrs. Mervin G. Pierpont, Baltimore, chairman of stamps and bonds for the State clubs.

Mrs. Kriel and Mrs. Pierpont held a conference in Baltimore on Thursday to map plans for State participation in the main objective this year of the General Federation of Women's Clubs—the purchase of a fleet of bombers for the armed forces. The aim is to have at least one bomber from each State, including the District of Columbia and Alaska. These are to be named for each State federation. More bombers bought and named by individual clubs or groups of clubs will swell the numbers of the fleet.

Members of federated clubs throughout the State will be asked to cooperate in this drive, which will start for the Third War Loan on September 9. They are requested to ask their families and friends when buying bonds, to give the Maryland Federation of Women's Clubs credit for their purchase, and thus help the State effort to have a bomber named "Maryland Federation, G. F. W. C." They will urge the purchase of all possible bonds to further the war effort.

The district chairmen for war service are as follows: Mrs. Harry A. Skidmore, Sykesville, First or Northern District; Mrs. James W. Hughes, Elkton, Eastern Shore District; Mrs. Roy D. Whitlock, Catonsville, stamps and bonds; Mrs. Willard M. Hillegeist, 909 West University Parkway, Baltimore District; Mrs. William N. Crisp, Brooklyn Park: Stamps and bonds, Mrs. Harry T. Cottman, jr., St. Elizabeths Hospital, Washington, D. C., Fourth or Southern District;; Mrs. Eric England, Sandy Spring, Fifth or Montgomery County District; Mrs. Harold Benjamin, College Park, Sixth or Prince George's County District.

Hooper L. Miles, State chairman of the Third War Loan Drive, and Mrs. Sydney Cone, chairman of the women's division, have promised all cooperation in working with the club women.

Mary Haworth's Mail

appears every day except Saturday in the women's pages. Tomorrow, in Section IV, Miss Haworth discusses the problem of a young wife, who is being jealously urged by her soldier husband to give up her good job and many friends here,—and go back home to escape male flirts, while he is away at war.

MAKE IT DO . . . .

The man's suit, ripped apart, is recut for its new female owner.

A Gold Mine in the Closet

By Ruth Gregory

There's been a lot of good wool stored away in moth balls since Pearl Harbor. We aren't suggesting that you rush right in and rip up your husband's good "civies" in order to get a smart men's wear suit for yourself. But there's apt to be a suit or two in the collection that's worn or that he never cared for anyway.

If you're a capable seamstress, here's a wonderful source for any number of garments either for yourself or for your children. It's no job for an amateur, of course, because this kind of making-over requires a lot more know-how than starting out on a fresh sewing project.

Consider Well:

The size of the suit, the kind of material in it, how much can be salvaged, are all individual problems, and the answers to them will determine what you're able to do with the suit. Once you've decided whether it's going to be a skirt for yourself, a suit, a coat for junior, or whatever, you'll want to pick a pattern that is adaptable to your material. Be sure to check the yardage called for on the pattern with the estimated yardage in the old suit.

This skirt was made from a pair of trousers.

Demobilizing the Old Suit:

Once you've got your plan, you can proceed, but carefully, with the ripping. Woolens ravel easily and careless yanking may ruin a good piece of material. Save all the good buttons, tapes, and lining material to use again. The next step is to wash the material carefully—most suitings are washable. Remember the instructions for washing woolens: lukewarm suds and lukewarm rinsing water. When the cloth is laundered and pressed (be sure to keep a cloth between the iron and the suiting), you'll feel much happier about the project, because most woolens look bright and fresh after washing.

Laying Out the Pattern:

The pattern must be laid out very carefully, since there are no selvages to guide you in finding the straight of the goods. Be sure that each pattern piece is placed with the grain of the material. Piecings will probably be necessary in some instances, but if you piece with care, using matching yarns, nobody will be the wiser.

Skirts and jumpers are two of the most practical and the least difficult (if you're a little afraid of venturing into suit tailoring. The gored skirt in the photograph was manufactured from a pair of woolen trousers without a great amount of effort. A tailored jumper out of man's worsted is a pretty smart idea for any woman's fall wardrobe, and again, it's a fairly simple project.

You can get several children's pieces out of one suit: a coat and a tam, for instance, for a little girl, and a two-piece suit for a small boy.

These are just a few suggestions. But any one of them, if acted upon, could be the starting point of a winter wardrobe for yourself or your children.

Made From His Suit

Pattern 4304 includes a step-by-step sew chart that shows exactly how to cut this smart suit from a man's suit. Yes, yardages are given for new fabric, but the thrill would not be there. Comes only in misses' sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20.

Bride Takes Wartime Scarcities in Stride, Stretches Available Furnishings

By Martha Ellyn

The tiny black clouds that wartime brides are experiencing have their silver linings. Jim and Judie are not starting off at the level that mom and pop have achieved. It's not the lack of financial indulgence but the availability of things that makes the difference.

Two rooms and a bath take the place of the honeymoon cottage. Crowded buses substitute for streamlined convertible coupes. Dinner is served on a card table in the living room instead of on the traditional dining room table. Such is a general picture of couples who are starting their households these critical days.

The problems confronting today's brides are many and varied. A typical example of the household difficulties facing newly married couples is shown by the experiences of Lieut. (jg) Gayl M. Spowers, USN, and Mrs. Spowers.

Mrs. Spowers until two months ago was an editor in the US Navy Department. Now, Jeri is concentrating on furnishing a home and cooking three squares a day.

"Why I can't even buy a potato masher," was her answer when I asked if she was having any difficulty in buying kitchen equipment.

"A clerk even tried to sell me a wooden mallet to use as a potato masher. That would have been okay if I were double jointed. But using the mallet would be much like putting a sleeve in the neck of a blouse instead of inserting it in the armhole," said this bride in good humor.

Search for Merchandise

Armed with a shopping list of household items, Jeri says she covered not only the beaten tracks, but also bypaths in search of merchandise. As concerns kitchen equipment here are some of her experiences:

TABLE LINENS — No satin damask, no point Viennese. Plenty of rayons; cork and plastic mats.

TIN LIDS—None. Still a moot question what to use in their place.

DISHES—Stock of china adequate. The five- and ten-cent stores offer many attractive values.

GRATERS—Metal ones not available. Uses plastic ones.

GARBAGE PAIL—None. Uses paper sacks and saves washing the pail.

PARING KNIVES—None. Experiencing difficulty peeling peaches, potatoes and the like with butcher knife. Is hopeful of better luck in finding knives, or "inheriting" one.

SINK STRAINERS — None. Must learn to be neat, not messy, in food preparation. Another use of newspapers is to do work on them, then roll up the accumulation and discard.

KITCHEN APRONS — Prices sky-high. Will make them. Probably out of her husband's discarded shirts.

SILVERWARE — Plated ware not available. Sterling flatware not plentiful and is expensive. Using odd pieces accumulated. Plastic handled flatware is filling in vacant spots.

COOKING UTENSILS — No aluminum pots, pans and skillets. Prefers heat resistant glassware anyway because when washed it has that "clean look."

Compensation of Wartimes

Although Jeri hasn't found more than 10 per cent of the items she needs, yet she isn't discouraged. She thinks learning to cook in wartime has its compensations.

"If new cooks have any tendencies to wasteful, extravagant ways, they will soon overcome them—or go hungry. With limited sources of supply in many food fields, with rationing, conservation and elimination of unnecessary waste the order of the day, one gets no chance to be other than thrifty," says this wartime bride.

This bride is also learning that many home furnishings have gone to war. In her search for rugs, beds, chests of drawers, chairs, draperies and other items, she found it required time, and more time, to find suitable furnishings for the money to be spent.

It was in a furniture store off the main thoroughfare that she located prewar furniture with springs. She also found that the period designs of better quality, more often were equipped with steel springs which makes for comfort in furniture. New construction, and not steel springs, was offered in modern furniture.

If eighteenth century furniture of good quality is the goal, then you can find the pot of gold, says Mrs. Spowers. But she didn't find any innersprings and mattress until friends who were moving away from the city offered to sell theirs.

Mrs. Gale Spowers, a recent bride shown here, is as happy as the bird who trills at the boiling point of the glass tea kettle. This bride doesn't mind that aluminum went to war. Glass cooking equipment, in her estimation, is "tops" because when washed it has that "clean look." If you want to know where to find these attractive and useful cooking utensils, call National 4200, Ext. 324, between 9 a. m. and 5:30 p. m.

One stroke of luck was when she "inherited" two overstuffed chairs of prewar construction. These she decided to have reupholstered. She has found the material to do the job, but as yet the manpower is lacking. So if absolutely necessary this resourceful young matron says she will do the job herself.

Floor coverings, too, have gone to war. The price on these is very high, she finds. In addition the color selection is very limited and all widths are not available. Until she does locate suitable floor coverings, or better days are here again, Mrs. Spowers plans to do without and keep her hardwood floors clean and shiny with elbow grease and wax.

New Broom Sweeps Clean

Since vacuum cleaners are not readily obtainable, the plan is to use a hand carpet sweeper and a broom. Anyway, hers is a new broom and they always sweep clean.

Twin chests of modern design, is one of the good finds of these newlyweds. They were bought for use in the bedroom, but also with the idea that they could be placed in livng room or dining room if needed.

Wedding presents are filling many niches. And contrary to the line-up of most wedding gifts, not one duplication, or "gymcrack" items was among their gifts. This too is a good sign, that families and friends are getting down to brass tacks and giving newlyweds really practical gifts.

More About the Lowbrows

At the risk of being called an "agitator," this column today continues its campaign against the snobbish lowbrows. It does so for the very good reason that the complacently ignorant constitute a special menace to American democracy's testing in the crucial period ahead.

That men are the main offenders in hillbilly talk, bad grammar, trivial thinking, suspicion of learning and stay-in-the-rut mental habits has been charged in letters to this column. Yet even though this be true, women are not blameless. In fact, the concealment and deprecation of brains was originally a feminine art—even though it was done to curry favor with men. Girls who attended the early-day women's colleges had to overdo the act of being nitwits on their summer vacations, we are told, in order to compensate for being "educated." The reason was obvious—a husband still was the main meal ticket any woman could anticipate.

Proud Nitwits Poor Citizens

Today that is no longer true. Yet we have the spectacle of women retreating not only into domesticity and femininity, but even into mental incapacity, to escape the thought and decisions needed of them as citizens if this democracy is to function and survive. We still have women proudly protesting that they "just can't understand" politics or economics or international affairs and preening themselves over being "too dumb" to know what lend-lease or reciprocal trade or the Atlantic Charter are all about. And this at a time when women voters are in the highest proportion they have ever been, when the potential feminine vote in 1944 is estimated at 85 million and when women voters actually outnumber men voters in 12 States!

We might forgive women their mental lethargy—a very human trait—but this pride of ignorance which shuts off progress and even aspiration is a dangerous thing. It is far too common in America among both women and men.

Why are all of us so intent on proving that we are rather on the ignorant side about most things? Why do we so often conceal our cultural interests and aspirations? Why are we so deadly afraid of the term "highbrow"?

Cartoon Professors Cause Prejudice

Possibly it is because we fear to be identified with the bookworm, the professor, the schoolmarm, the art gallery addict, as portrayed in the cartoon. But why should these types, all symbols of man's search for knowledge, have been cartooned and ridiculed to such an extent? Possibly because of jealousy, or because they are set apart from the mob. But probably primarily because of man's subconscious resistance to the forces that would move him out of his accustomed (and to him safe) rut of thinking and acting. The travail of progress, the uncertainty of change, are always feared. Hence the emphasis on "what I have, or what I know, is good enough for me."

However much we may dislike change, we are facing plenty of it now. There is no escaping it. It will challenge all our wits, our knowledge, our capacity for using our minds, to adapt to it. Uncle Eph on his cracker barrel, the wise-cracking drug-store cowboy, the umpire "cussers" at baseball games, the swaggering male who disdains his wife's cultural yearnings, the self-confessed bird-brained women cannot meet the problems of today or tomorrow unless they put off their snobbery of ignorance and seek knowledge with humility and open minds.

All of us need to wage unrelenting war against self-satisfied ignorance whenever we meet the slightest manifestation of it in ourselves or in others. It is time to stand together on this, not only that we may have no book-burnings or promulgation of medieval superstition, or emotional mass ideologies in this country, but that we may strengthen the forces of enlightenment everywhere for their long pull ahead.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Uncle Sam walks in where Molyneaux wouldn't risk treading. Our L-85 frocks practically compel a woman to have a good figure.

This new dress of yours will average 10 per cent less material, no frills and very little trimming. Of course, it will have slim lines. It is what the fashion people call "the body basic dress"—and, lady, your chassis had better be good!

From the standpoint of fitness, the new regulation is an excellent thing. If you are trim, you are fit, and you don't need trimmings. With weight not too far out of line, all you have to do is get your muscles in tone. Here is a foursome that will trim the waist, flatten the stomach and slim the hips.

For the Waist

Movement: Press small of back down against the floor as you twist at the waist to touch first the left, then the right thigh to the floor. Do this exercise slowly and concentrate the wrench on the waist. Keep it up for 20 counts.

For the Hips

Position: Same position, but with feet on floor close to hips.

Movement: Roll from side to side. Keep pressing the small of the back flat against the floor, but, at the same time, try to roll where you are flabby. This will probably include the area from the side of the hip to that extra padding on the back of the hip.

For the Bust

Position: Standing erect and in good posture, feet parallel, arms down, limp.

Movement: Keep your arms limp and move the shoulders up, back and around, in wide, sweeping circles.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

These are busy, hectic days. Few young mothers are able to employ help, even if such help were to be had. This means that all the duties of the household as well as the new duties of taking care of a baby fall upon her.

If she is very new at the job of motherhood every little thing will trouble her. She will be slow and awkward about bathing the baby and preparing its formula. The mountain of diapers and clothes to be washed daily will seem insurmountable to her. She will run to look at her darling baby every few minutes to be sure it isn't suffocating under its covers or is sleeping on a crumpled ear, or just breathing. The eternal miracle is always that this tiny mite stays alive.

When the baby is asleep she has to be a dynamo of energy. She tries in this period to make the formula, wash the diapers, make the beds, plan her meals and do her ordering.

Consideration for the young mother and her many morning tasks should prevent more skilled, or less burdened mothers from interrupting her. But does it? Many a mother bewails the tendency of her friends to call up and say in lazy voices, "What are you doing?" She wants to enumerate the long list of what she's doing, but she's too polite. So she sits there squirming while her interrogator asks her if she knows about this and that and what she thinks of it, when all she can think of are the precious moments being wasted.

No young mother wants to lose touch with her friends and she appreciates the telephone which brings them near to her so quickly. But there are times for such conversations and these times are not the busy mornings nor the early afternoons when, if at any time, she has an opportunity to sink down for a short, blissful catnap.

Mrs. Winston Churchill Faces Women Scribes for First Time

Wife of Britain's Prime Minister Wins Great Praise From Women Reporters

Mrs. Winston Churchill, wife of the Prime Minister, sat surrounded by women reporters yesterday afternoon and came through her first press conference with flying colors.

Mrs. Harold Butler, wife of the British Minister, had gathered the women writers together for a cocktail to meet this completely charming woman, called "queen among wives" and by her husband, "a being incapable of an ignoble thought."

She is all that and more. She's lovely to look at with clear fair skin for which the British are famous; gray hair softly sculptured in curls and waved away from her face; a cameo-like profile and a smile which radiates kindliness and goodwill toward her fellowmen. Subaltern Mary Churchill of the Auxiliary Territorial Service, was with her mother, a young woman of sturdy build, a fresh rosy complexion and bright blue eyes and wearing the uniform of her organization with a true military flair.

Doesn't Take to The Spotlight

Yesterday Mrs. Churchill wore black—a smart frock with a deep V neckline edged in pointed scallops which also finished the skirt.

A double rope of pearls was about her throat, a diamond and ruby bracelet sparkeled on her wrist and a diamond brooch held two fresh ivory toned roses. Her hat—also black—was a Breton sailor type with a stiff horsehair bow at the back.

Both are typically British and take the spotlight with a natural reticence. Yet Mrs. Churchill answered innumerable questions put to her with sure and concise replies, the result of quick thinking and a keen mind.

"Are the British people as a nation a tired people?" she was asked.

"CERTAINLY not," was the ready retort. "We could go on 'til the cows come home. And here Mrs. Churchill embroidered her statement by saying perhaps it is because the food problem has been handled so well; that the people never stop to think of themselves.

Explaining the rationing system in Great Britain, the Prime Minister's wife told her audience that the meat quota is low; milk is rationed except for babies and young children; that friends "pool" their points, much as we do in this country, if they want to give a party, and that there is entertaining in London, but, of course, in a most informal manner.

Dressing for dinner, a ritual which no Britisher would ever think of not observing before the war, is practically out for the duration. Evening gowns have short skirts and it all depends on your mood whether you change from your daytime frock or uniform or not. Mrs. Churchill gave encouraging reports on housekeeping in war-ridden England. Most households run smoothly because everybody helps each other with their various duties and even though domestics are practically nonexistent they manage to get along comfortably.

Saw Pentagon Building; Knows Jokes

Questioned on her impressions of the Capital, Mrs. Churchill told of her visit to the Pentagon Building, which she found a fascinating place and also revealed that she is now up on all the Pentagon jokes.

To mark the occasion of her visit to the building a film was put on for her special entertainment in which it is attempted to "explain" the British to the Americans. Much amused, she said she regretted she was not able to stay for the end as a visit to Mount Vernon was on her schedule necessitating her leaving before the end.

Mary Churchill, once spanked by a Yank in England when she ribbed an American soldier about the size of his feet, has shown much interest in the WAC camps in this country. Her visits to several of them brought forth the observations that the training is entirely similar with her own organization, the ATS. That there are a greater number of British ATS, however, in occupational jobs, but she feels that after four years of service, which is the period of the ATS organization, the WACS will have accomplished just as much.

Vanderbilt Twins In Newport

The Misses Elsie and Anne Vanderbilt, twin daughters of Comdr. William H. Vanderbilt, USNR, and Mrs. Vanderbilt, are visiting their grandmother, Mrs. Paul Fitz Simons, at Newport, R. I., before joining their parents in San Francisco.

Commander Vanderbilt, former Governor of Rhode Island, was stationed in Washington before being transferred to California.

'Tempest in Saucebowl' Over Menu for Mrs. Roosevelt

Question of Whether to Serve First Lady Conservative or Australian Food Stirs Furor

By the International News Service

Canberra, Australia, Sept. 3.—A tempest in a saucebowl was brewing today in this capital of Australia over the menu to be served to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt at the commonwealth's official luncheon for her in Parliament House.

If they had some cranberries they could have turkey with cranberry sauce, the sponsors of the luncheon decided. But while Australians are fond of turkey, cranberries don't grow in Canberra.

Federal ministers and senior officials argued "Why serve Eleanor turkey with cranberry sauce, which she can have any day she wants it in the White House?" Statesmen of strong nationalistic leanings favored a menu of pure Australia atmosphere, including kangaroo-tail soup, Barramundi subtropical fish, and dugong meat, which resembles pork and comes from an aquatic mammal frequenting the Australian coast.

However, the battle of the menu finally was won by the forces of orthodoxy, when dehydrated American cranberries were found, and any shortcomings of the menu were left for later parliamentary criticism.

In the midst of this international crisis it was brought out that Mrs. Roosevelt will be the first official woman guest ever or elsewhere on this continent. entertained in the federal Parliament's exclusive dining room. There may be a few other women present, but the function will be predominantly masculine.

The visit of the American President's wife, however, will serve as a commando invasion to prepare die-hard members of Parliament for the first women members elected for the new Parliament to assemble later this month.

At least one and possibly two or three women members will take seats in the Australian Parliament for the first time in history.

Meanwhile, extraordinary difficulties were being encountered in arranging an Australian itinerary for Mrs. Roosevelt, largely because of the varieties of officialdom, both Australian and American, engaged in the task. The need for secrecy concerning her movements required for security in wartime, was another handicap, but it was claimed today that all difficulties are now well under control.

Mervin Slosberg of the NBC reported by radio from New Zealand on Thursday that Mrs. Roosevelt visited additional American and New Zealand hospitals in Auckland, as well as a servicewomen's club and a canning factory.

The First Lady told hospitalized Americans that their efforts have "saved America from such destruction by enemy action which I saw in Britain and which exists in other nations."

The canning workers were reported to have cheered enthusiastically when Mrs. Roosevelt stressed the importance of Anglo-American friendship in the postwar years, and the need for "better constructive work between the United Nations after the war."

Their marriage took place on Monday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil McComas in Chevy Chase, Md. The Rev. Robert Keesler officiated at the ceremony before an improvised altar of palms and white gladioli and lighted candles. Mr. McComas gave the bride in marriage.

Charles Webster Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. O'Neal Makemson Johnson of Bethesda, Md. Dr. Robert Moorhead officiated at the ceremony.

The bride wore a blue crepe afternoon frock and a blue veiled feather hat. Her corsage was of gardenias. Miss Penny Shade, who was her sister's only attendant, was in a pink wool frock and brown accessories and wore a shoulder bouquet of white roses. Mr. Johnson was best man for his son.

Lieutenant Johnson attended St. Alban's School in Washington, Randolph-Macon Academy at Front Royal, Va., and Duke Univeristy in Durham, N. C. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the U. S. Army Air Corps at George Field, Lawrenceville, Ill., on Monday morning.

Noted Bolivian Due for Visit To Washington

Another Latin-American military statesman has accepted an official invitation to visit Washington. He is Lieut. Gen. Miguel A. Candia, the Minister of Defense for Bolivia.

It will be the first visit to the United States for this Bolivian general, who has held the Minister of Defense post for the last two years. Plans have not yet been completed for his visit, but it is a safe guess that the Bolivian Ambassador and Senora de Guachalla will entertain at a reception in his honor at the Embassy on Massachusetts ave.

General Candia has long been interested in the educational system of the United States and is definitely planning to visit some of our colleges and schools during his as yet unscheduled tour of this country. One of his early posts was commanding officer in charge of the War College of Bolivia, from which he was graduated. Before becoming Minister of Defense he was Chief of Operations of the General Staff.

Headquarters For AWHRC To Open

After several months of recruiting and preparation, the American Women's Hospitals Reserve Corps will make its formal bow to Washington on Tuesday at the corps' newly acquired headquarters, 1605 Connecticut ave.

Semimedical, semimilitary in character, the AWHRC is an auxiliary of the American Women's Hospitals, an organization of medical women and their aides, which served with distinction at home and at the front during World War I and which has continued its service into World War II. Until the German invasion, the American Women's Hospital in Paris was one of the best equipped and staffed medical centers in Europe. Foreign units now are operating in North Africa and South America and national units in the larger cities of the United States.

Mrs. Ward Is Head Of Corps

Directing the Washington unit is Capt. Dorothy Lee Ward, recently commissioned to that office by Dr. Luvia Williard, commander in chief of the corps. Dr. Williard is a fellow of the American Association of Physicians and is director of the Children's Department, Jamaica Hospital, Jamaica, Long Island. Captain Ward has a long background in medical service, being founder and executive president of Doctors Information Service, which for 20 years has served as contact medium between doctors and patients in New York. Lieut. Louise Atwill is codirector.

Service-minded women are invited to attend the opening of the corps on Tuesday for enrollment, for inquiry, or to visit headquarters, any day except Sunday. Headquarters will be open between 10 o'clock and 4:30. Under supervision of Mrs. Parker West, specialist in hospital and outpatient service, classes are being organized for immediate instruction in first aid, nurses' aid, hospital training, home nursing, child care, hospital orientation and allied subjects. A motor detachment also is being formed. Courses cover a three-week period, two hours a day, three days a week, and will be conducted in corps headquarters and in Walsh House, the Red Cross Center at 20th st. and Massachusetts ave.

Members Wear Field Gray Suits

The AWHRC is a uniformed organization. Members wear field gray tailored suits, the winged staff or caduceus of the United States Army Medical Corps, and the folded wings, insignia of the corps, superimposed on a field of maroon. Uniforms are desired but are not obligatory except as required by hospital service.

"Every American woman knows that there is a job for her to do," says Captain Ward, emphasizing the need of recruits to fill hospital requirements. "If she has not yet found it, we have one for her. If a woman has time left over from the job she is now doing, we need her. Hospitals are desperately in need of womanpower. So is the home nursing service. Remember the corps' slogan, 'We serve in war and in peace.' We must begin now to plan our part in the work of rehabilitation after our victory is won."

Churchmen In Capital From Chile

Two eminent ecclesiastics of Chile—Msgr. Manuel Larrain Errazuriz, Bishop of Talca, and Msgr. Javier Bascunan Valdes, rector of the Junior Seminary at Santiago—have arrived at Washington as guests of the Department of State.

During the next two months they will visit educational institutions and social service centers in Baltimore, New York, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago and St. Louis, as well as in the National Capital. Bishop Larrain Errazuriz organized the School of Social Service of the Catholic University at Santiago, of which university he was formerly vice rector, and takes an active interest in social welfare measures, as does also Msgr. Bascunan Valdes.

In March of the present year Bishop Larrain Errazuriz called six United States priests—Maryknoll Fathers—to work in his diocese. Three of them are now teaching in a college there, while the other three are carrying on parish work. It is the hope of the bishop—who says that "the future of the world rests on America, a united America"—to have a religious congregation of the United States establish itself in Chile for the purpose of building up a polyclinic and other health and welfare services.

While in this country the two distinguished guests will make a special study of seminaries and universities and of the organization of Catholic welfare services in general.

Capital Store Sales Off 15% During Week

By S. Oliver Goodman

The Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday that Washington department store sales last week were 15 per cent less than in the corresponding week last year. In the four weeks ended August 28, such sales were 8 per cent under those of the like 1942 period.

Sales in the entire Fifth Reserve District were down 11 per cent for the week and 5 per cent for the four-week period.

Nationally, department store sales last week were 1 per cent higher than the same 1942 period, while in the four weeks ended August 28 they totaled 6 per cent more than in the corresponding period last year.

The Washington sales decrease, it was said, was due mainly to less promotional activity and the relative absence of clearances.

Business Briefs Of D. C. Interest

FICA Earnings Summary

In a summary of operations since 1923 the Federal Intermediate Credit Banks yesterday reported net earnings of $33,651,730 after losses and valuation reserve adjustments.

Losses sustained since organization in 1923 amount to only 0.14 per cent on nearly six and a half billion in credit extended, according to George M. Brennan, FICA commissioner.

Other highlights of the July 31 report—surplus, reserves and undivided profits $28,963,209; total net worth, $88,963,200; unmatured consolidated debentures outstanding, $293,125,000, total assets, $385,341,076.

The 12 Federal Intermediate credit banks, organized under the Agricultural Credits Act of 1923, discount agricultural and livestock paper for banks, farm cooperatives, production credit associations and other farm groups. Banks obtain their loan funds principally by sales of consolidated debentures which are offered monthly in the open market to the investing public.

Postwar Oil Visions

Fifty to 70 miles to the gallon of gasoline is visualized by petroleum chemists in the postwar era, according to W. M. Carney, chief chemist of the Lion Oil Refining Co. Sealed cooling systems with petroleum product liquids in both cars and planes, 100,000-mile tires, and 20,000-mile lubricating oil are also predicted in this period.

The oil industry is rich enough and progressive enough to raise a large family of healthy new infant industries from the thousands of new experiments incubating in its research laboratories, Mr. Carney concluded.

Dividend Payments Drop in August

August cash dividend payments totaling $141,000,000 were $2,000,000 below those of the same month a year ago, the Commerce Department reported yesterday.

Such payments for the first eight months of the year aggregated $2,052,000,000, a 1 per cent drop from the $2,081,000,000 total for the corresponding period a year ago.

Road to Be Built

600 Face Eviction September 10

Due to "military necessity," more than 600 persons must vacate their homes on September 10, Justice F. Dickinson Letts ruled yesterday as he removed the final legal obstacle to the construction of a military access road between Bolling Field and Camp Springs Airport. It is along the route of this road that the 600 have their homes.

Meanwhile, housing authorities were unable to promise that the majority of those affected will be able to find shelter here. They blamed the predicament of the 112 Negro families housed there on "inadequate planning between Government agencies."

About 100 of the persons involved filled the District Court room yesterday where their attorney, Albert Brick, asked the justice to set aside a court order, dated August 21, for surrender of their property to the Government. Brick claimed the householders were given inadequate notice to find shelter. They were formally notified on August 21 of their pending eviction.

Alexander H. Bell, jr., of the Justice Department Lands Division, said, however, that it has been well known in the area for months that the eviction would take place.

Justice Letts, who denied the motion to set aside the eviction order, said he regretted "the inconvenience and suffering" which would result, but that "expediency" was necessary because of military reasons. He ordered a jury impaneled next Thursday to determine a fair price for the properties. Involved in the condemnation are 378 lots.

The homesteads are along a three and a half mile stretch past Sheridan rd. and Sumner rd. se., from Bolling Field to the District Line. There are also business properties, a church and cemeteries.

John Ihlder, executive officer of the National Capital Housing Authority, said every effort would be made to find shelter for an "substantial number," but that he could promise no more. He said it takes six months to build a house and his agency, as in almost all previous cases, was given only 30 days' notice. However, all persons affected have been given first priority on all open Government housing here.

He said the short notice given in this case had temporarily offset plans to house others here, and urged that in the future any agency contemplating clearing property for projects notify him well in advance of action.

Betty Scott, 16, of 411 16th st. se., died at Casualty Hospital yesterday of injuries suffered Wednesday when an automobile in which she was riding crashed against a tree and an electric pole at Pennsylvania ave. and Forte dr. se.

She was a passenger, police said, with Mary Dotson, 18, 2710 N st. se., in an automobile operated by George W Sowers, 20, of 2803 Q st. se., when the car hurtled the sidewalk, uprooted the tree and then collided with the light pole.

Both the driver and Miss Dotson suffered multiple lacerations.

Police said the automobile apparently was traveling at a high rate of speed.

Miss Scott's death was the fifty-seventh District fatality this year, and an inquest, at which Sower will appear, will be held next week.
